OUR UNITED STATES TRADE.

An interesting "Review of the World's Commerce" has just been issued by the United States Government at Washington. It gives a comprehensive review of the trade of the great republic with all countries; but its special interest to us is what it contains in regard to Canada. Here are some extracts:

| | 1895. | 1896. |
|---|---|---|
| Imports (from Canada) | $40,748,940 | $37,353,317 |
| Exports (to Canada) | 58,398,009 | 62,574,084 |
| Total | $99,146,949 | $99,927,401 |

Mr. Riley, the American Consul General of Ottawa, is reported as follows: He "notes the gradual increase of trade between Canada and the United States in recent years. In 1868, the imports from the United States for home consumption amounted to $26,315,052; in 1895, to $54,634,521, or 36½ per cent. of the total imports (of the U. S.) in 1868 against 52 per cent. in 1895. The imports of Great Britain (to U. S.) have fallen off from over 50 per cent. to about 34 per cent. in 1895."

He goes on to report that, "The imports for consumption in Canada exceeded the domestic exports until 1895 when the exports were larger by $2,167,499. The excess of exports was still larger ($2,541,384) during the year ended June 30th, 1896. The exports (from Canada) to Great Britain exceeded the imports by $26,771,827, while the imports from the United States exceeded the exports by $22,330,748." These significant facts have been frequently referred to in THE BEAVER before.

The Ottawa Consul General goes on to report, "The leading items in the list of exports (from Canada) to the United States are asbestus, coal, nickel, fish, furs, lumber, logs, shingles, sheep, hides, hay, horses, pulpwood, wood-pulp, wool, barley, beans and pease. Among the principal articles imported (into Canada) from the United States are carriages, coal coke, cotton and cotton goods, drugs, electrical apparatus, fancy goods, fruits, furniture, hides, manufactures of glass, iron and steel, jewelry, leather goods, oil, paper, seeds, sugar, soap, tobacco, turpentine, twine and watches. It will be noted that all the Canadian mineral products are exported to the United States."

He goes on to make the following analysis of Canada's exports for the information of the Washington government: "In 1890, about 30 per cent. of the agricultural products exported (from Canada) were sold to Great Britain, while in 1895, Great Britain took over 66 per cent. In 1895, the United States purchased only 23 per cent. of the Canadian agricultural products, as against 63 per cent in 1890."

These significant facts indicate what have been the actual workings of the N.P. during the last eighteen years. They tell a different story than that related from many Liberal platforms during the same time.

The Consul General goes on to report as follows in regard to Canada's efforts to extend its trade and commerce: "The Dominion Government has, during recent years, sought new markets for its surplus products. It has subsidized lines of steamers between Canada and China and Japan, Australia, Belgium, and the West Indies. A proposition is now under consideration for a 20 knot service between Montreal and England, for which it is proposed to give a subsidy of $750,000 per annum for ten years. The construction of a cable between Vancouver and Australia, to be subsidized by Canada and Great Britain and the Australian provinces, is also under consideration. Plans already adopted provide for the completion of the St. Lawrance Canal system within three years. This will give a 14 foot chanel from the Great Lakes to Montreal, and is expected to divert much of the lake traffic destined for Europe to this route. The enlargement of the present canal connecting the St. Lawrence and the Hudson, via Lake Champlain, would undoubtedly divert much of this traffic to New York."

Of course that implies the using of the Canadian Welland and St. Lawrance canals to Montreal.

DOMINION DAY AT NAPANEE.

THE RACES.

A BEAUTIFUL DAY AND SOME VERY EXCITING CONTESTS.

Had the Clerk of the Weather been specially petitioned for a fine day it would have been hard to pick out a more ideal one than was awarded the people of Napanee and vicinity to witness the races at the Driving Park yesterday afternoon. The rain of Tuesday had settled the dust and put the track in first class shape, and faster time, considering the record of some of the horses, was expected. While the Buffalo Bill exhibition in Kingston undoubtedly drew away a large number that would probably have been with us, the excursions from Picton, Belleville and Deseronto more than made up for the deficiency, so that the attendance was fully up to former years. Dr. Dulmage, of Belleville, filled the responsible position of starter, and his knowledge of racing rules and firm decisions showed that a wise choice had been made. The drivers were given to understand that the rules were made to be observed, and that as far as was in his power be intended they should be. As a result not very much time was lost in scoring. We have not time at this late hour to give an extended report, but will simply give the summary:

Napanee Defeats the Leaders.

The tide of fortune has turned, and Napanee footballers can once more hold up their heads. By defeating the Deseronto team, the leaders in the Quinte League, at the park yesterday afternoon, our team has shown that they have the stuff from which winning football teams are made. If the same team could have been got together earlier in the season, and proper and regular practice arranged for, there is not much doubt that Napanee would have come out on top in the series for the Quinte cup. Yesterday's game, though not a very scientific exhibition of football as it is played, owing principally to the slow field and the boiling sun, was nevertheless close and exciting. After the kick-off the ball hovered in Napanee's territory for the first fifteen or twenty minutes, and from a rush down the right wing Deseronto finally scored. A few minutes later Napanee evened up matters by scoring on a rush in which all the forwards participated. A little before half-time Deseronto had a good chance to score on a penalty kick, but they failed to accept the opportunity. During the second half the Napanee boys woke up and made some pretty rushes down the field from, one of which Preston scored the second goal for the home team on a neat shot. About five minutes afterwards Deseronto again scored, thus making the score two all. A few minutes later Deseronto forwards made a pretty rush up field and the ball was again shot through from the right wing. The referee, however, was awake and detected an off-side play and accordingly refused to allow the goal. His view of the case was corroborated by nearly all the spectators who were conversant with the rules, but the Deseronto players could not be persuaded to abide by his decision, and after a few minutes dispute, they preferred to leave the field rather than play the rest of the game under protest. Napanee then lined up, put the ball through Deseronto's goal and the referee then awarded the game to Napanee by a score of three to two. The teams lined up as follows:

Napanee—goal, Harrison; backs, Smith, Durand; half backs, G. Exley, Rockwell, Vanalstine; forwards, Ed. Grange, Preston, W. Exley, Wagar and Grieve.

Deseronto—goal, Richardson; backs, Harvey, D. Edwards; half-backs, J. Edwards, E. Goulon, Oliver; forwards, Pulkinghorn, MacIntosh, J. Goulon, Keele and Hicks.

Mr. D. Murray, of Kingston, acted very acceptably as referee.

OBITUARY.

MRS. B. B. VANSLYCK.

On Friday night, June 25th, Mrs. B. B. Vanslyck, Morven, passed peacefully away after an illness of over a year, of heart trouble, aged fifty-seven years. Deceased was a daughter of the late Robinson Fralick, and was born, married, lived all her life and died on the old homestead. Besides her husband, two daughters, Mrs. Albert Doller, (who was injured in a runaway while on her way to attend her mother in her sickness), and Miss Mary, at home, and one son, Arthur, are left to mourn the loss of a loving mother. Deceased was a consistent member of the Methodist church, and an active worker in all its branches. The funeral took place on Sunday last to the Morven vault, and was one of the largest known in that locality. The family have the sincere sympathy of a very large circle of friends in their bereavement.

MRS. ELIZABETH BEGGS, of North Fredericksburgh, died on Saturday last, aged thirty-three years. Deceased was a daughter of Capt. Bartley and leaves to mourn her early demise one little daughter aged eight years. She had been ailing for more than a year with a throat affection, which baffled the best medical skill. The funeral took place at one o'clock on Tuesday afternoon to the Western cemetery vault.

—It is expected that a pitched battle will soon be fought between Gen. Weyler and Gen. Garcia, which will mean Spain's defeat and retirement from Cuba or the crushing of the insurrection.

SPORTING.

YACHTING.

Don't forget the second race of the Yacht Club next Friday. The Reindeer will take excursionists to the scene for the small sum of 25 cents.

The famous old Dauntless beat all the other Napanee yachts in a race a few days ago, by 23m actual and 8m corrected time. She won in a squall, as usual. The Dauntless is a very "stormy petrel" of yachts—a ruler of the storm.—Belleville Intelligencer.

FOOTBALL.

The Quinte district association football league matches are nearing an end. The Sydenham team has one more to play with Picton, Kingston two, with Picton and Deseronto, and Deseronto two, with Napanee and Kingston. The correct score is: Deseronto, ten points; Sydenham, nine points; Kingston, eight points. The Sydenham team claims ten points, asserting that the Napanee team was defeated in the last match. In this contention the players are wrong, as the referee acted in violation to the rules of the union.

The Deseronto team journeyed to Sydenham on Saturday and met with defeat, the score at the finish being three to one in Sydenham's favor. It was two-nothing at half time.

CYCLING.

The following is self-explanatory:—

To unattached bicycle riders:—

The Canadian Wheelmen's Association is making an appeal to the unattached riders of Napanee for assistance in swelling its membership.

Our association, single-handed, went to Ottawa for the benefit of thousands of bicycle riders all over Canada endeavoring to get legislation to compel railroads to take off the most unjust charge imposed for carrying wheels on trains. In a fight that lasted many weeks we got our bill as far as the Senate. While dealing with the House of Commons and its intelligent members we were all right. In the Senate we were "hoisted." One Senator declared himself in open committee to be against us, because at one time a bicycle rider ran over his toes. We saw the finish plainly when we first got among that party of elderly non-bicycle riders.

However, we secured a promise that next session we would get our bill if the railroads do not take off the tax. We are still full of fight, and do not feel anywhere like being "licked." We are going to Parliament again and we want the support of every rider to back us up. In Napanee alone we should have 100 members. When we get into action again at next session of Parliament we want to go there backed by a membership double that which we now have.

We know we have the sympathy and encouragement of every rider in this fight, but we want more—we want your name on our rolls to give us backing.

Our fee is only 75c and we give you for that reduced hotel rates throughout Canada, a bi-monthly cycle paper unequalled in Canada, legal protection of your rights and privileges as wheelmen, a chance to join an organized chorus in crying for better roads, a ticket entitling you to many privileges in travelling and a sure introduction to the chief kingpin of cycling in every village, town and city in Canada, whose duty it is to supply you with any necessary information and exercise "brotherly love."

Our newspaper alone is worth more than the fee, and the saving in two days' travel at the best hotels with your ticket will more than repay your outlay. Not only you, but your wife, mother, father, brother, in fact the whole family (if amateurs) are all eligible. Drop a letter with 75c in it to any of the following gentlemen, and in short order you will receive a ticket of membership in the C. W. A., the biggest athletic organization in Canada, ever alert to exert itself in looking after the interests of bicyclists throughout Canada and in fighting oppression. Most respectfully,

Secy.—F. C. Anderson,
Treas.—W. T. Waller.

SANDHURST AND CONWAY.

As I heard that our former correspondent had either died or been murdered, I decided to inform our readers of the tales of robbery and fighting, and last but not least, the tales that are being told of our baseball club on the street corners and in the houses. After a very successful season our ball club has disbanded. They have not lost a game this season, which is quite creditable for such a slow place as Sandhurst. They would like to play Napanee, but everyone knows that Napanee is afraid to tackle the S.B.C.U.N. On Tuesday they prepared to play Waupoose for $5.00 and the championship of the Bay of Quinte, but bad weather prevented.

On Tuesday, June 22nd, the Jubilee celebration took place at Sandhurst. A vast crowd was present and the mayor presided. The first event was a bicycle race between the Conway scorchers and Sandhurst's best. It was a close race, and as they neared the home stretch a blanket (a horse-blanket if you like) would have covered all, but Seymour stuck out his neck, went forward a hair's breadth, and thus they closed. Seymour won by a neck. Next came a speech by G. H. Switzer on "What I don't know about baseball". It took George some time to tell this, which does not say much for his knowlege of the game, but then he [illegible] improve. Our teacher, J. Allen, [illegible] described the Queen's reign and tried to show all that the Queen might have [illegible] when young and thus she would not have lived to be nearly as old as she is now. The gypsies then gave some sweet music while the school children of S. S. No. 2 sang together:

It is clear to all
 That the useless nine
Cannot play ball
 In the summer time.
For they are not made
 Of solid stuff,
They are all afraid
 And like to bluff.
Fletcher on first
 Is of pretty good stuff,
But the man on second
 Likes to blow and puff.
And the man at short
 Is like a telegraph pole,
Or a walk-up-the-creek,
 That is caught in a hole.
And so we now drink
 To the Useless Nine,
Who cannot play ball
 In the summer time. Amen.

The band then played, the balloon went up, and the people dispersed, well pleased with everything.

Lost, strayed or stolen, near the postoffice, on June 24th, a bottle of poison, which was intended for the rats, and as it is supposed that it was given to the wrong rats, our newly appointed constable, who at the risk of his life performed the heroic deed of stopping a fight on Main st., has been put on the trail and will thankfully receive any information.

The farmers are glad to have rain.

School is closed for the holidays.

A large crowd went to the festival at Sillsville. The Napanee talent delighted all.

Pointers for Business Men.

The newspaper brings together the wide-awake buyer and the wideawake merchant.

To be successful, advertising must be looked after just as systematically as any other branch of business.

An advertisement doesn't need any introduction. It should go straight to the point without any equivocation.

Let your rivals pay their own advertising bills. Don't use your space to advertise them by mentioning them.

It is of advantage to an advertiser to have some one specialty with which his name can always be connected in the public mind.

More than one man has been called crazy for advertising largely, but no one seems to remember his aberration after he makes a comfortable fortune.

It is the associating your name with something that people want and your power to convince them that you will do well by them that makes advertising valuable.

Advertising must be done as sensibly and carefully as any other part of a business. Nothing is more disappointing than carelessness, neglected, half-done advertising. It is extremely unreasonable to give less attention to the advertising than to any other department of a business, and yet expect the biggest results of all from it.

Advertising is an art, and, like all arts, every man who practices it colors it with his own individuality. That is why only the most general rules can be given, and circumstances make even these general rules inapplicable in some cases. The only rule that will fit all contingencies is: Use your common sense and judgment on the case in hand. If you do not possess any common sense or judgment you should not advertise.

License Law Amendments.

Several important amendments to the License law went into force on July 1st. We condense the following which will apply to this County and Town.

1. A licensed liquor shop may, hereafter, sell as small a quantity as half a pint, but it must be in an unbroken package and must not be consumed on the premises.

2. All bar-rooms and licensed shops must be closed not later than 10 o'clock in townships and 11 o'clock in town, and must not be opened till 6 in the morning. All such must be closed from 7 on Saturday evening till 6 on Monday morning, as heretofore.

3. No liquors can be consumed on licensed premises during prohibited hours, even though bought before that time, except by an actual lodger or some member of the family.

4. No liquors can be sold to any person under 21 years of age. Whoever sells to such, as well as the license holder, will be liable to a fine of from $10 to $50. A minor, however, may purchase upon the written order of his parent or guardian.

5. Minors are not allowed to loiter about bar rooms or other rooms where liquor is dispensed, unless in company with a parent, or guardian, or a boarder or lodger on premises. A fine of from $2 to $10 may be imposed on license holders violating this law.

6. Every conviction against a license holder, of which he is cognizant, or at which he connives, must be certified to the Board of License Commissioners. After three such convictions within one year, so long as on different days, makes it necessary to cancel the license, and disqualifies the license holder.

PUT TO THE TEST

THE MOST CONVINCING AND ABSOLUTE PROOF GIVEN.

That Dr Williams' Pink Pills Cure When Other Medicines Fail—What they have Done for Others They Will Do for You

No remedy of modern times has offered more, or stronger proof of its sterling merit than has Dr Williams' Pink Pills. The cures are not those of people in foreign lands, but from all parts of our country, and the statements made are easily verified by everyone in the vicinity in which the cures reported occur. When such proof as this is offered doubt must cease, and the medicine must be awarded the palm of superiority over all others. Every mail brings letters from grateful people in all parts of Canada, who have been cured by the use of Dr Williams' Pink Pills, sometimes after other medicines had failed, and it is the words of gratitude spoken by sufferers thus restored to health that has created the enormous demand this medicine has. The following letter is but a fair sample of hundreds constantly being received:—The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co.:

DEAR SIRS.—I have great pleasure in bearing testimony to the medicinal value of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, as a blood purifier and health restorer. For ten years I was a victim to a complication of troubles, beginning with quinsey and followed by rheumatism and bronchitis. My physicians told me the trouble had become chronic, and that every winter I would either have to house myself up or go to a warmer climate. Two years ago I was confined to my bed and room from February until May, under the doctor's care. One day while reading of the cures wrought by the use of Dr Williams' Pink Pills, I determined to try them, and I found a cure at last in this splendid medicine. I used a dozen boxes of the pills and I have never been better in my life than I am now, and I have not been troubled in any way with my old complaints since I discontinued the use of the Pink Pills. As I have already stated I was a sufferer for years, and during that period spent a small fortune in doctor's medicines and drugs, only to find in the end that Dr. Williams Pink Pills accomplished what all other medicines failed to do. When my friends who knew how often I was laid aside with illness asked me what cured me I am always happy to say Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

Yours greatfully
MRS. J. A. MCKIM,
Cataraqui.

Mr. and Mrs. McKim are among the best known and most esteemed residents of Cataraqui, Ont. Mr. McKim has been a travelling salesman for pianos and organs in the district in which he resides for upwards of twenty five years.

What stronger proof than the above can be had for the claim that Dr Williams' Pink Pills cure when all other medicines fail? If you are ailing give this great medicine a fair trial and the result will not disappoint you. The public are cautioned against numerous pink colored imitations. Insist upon taking nothing but the packages which bear the full trade mark "Dr. Williams Pink Pills for Pale People."

COLLINS' BAY

(For last issue.)

The Floral Jubilee under auspices of the Ladies' Aid, which was held on 16th inst., was a decided success. The floral decorations were of a very high order and show the artistic taste of the ladies on the floral committee. Refreshments consisting of ice cream, cakes, etc., were served in the basement of the church, which was a veritable garden of Eden. After refreshments they all repaired to the hall where a first-class programme was given. The proceeds amounted to upwards of $30.

Everything that takes place now seems to be of a jubilee character, as on Friday 18th, the Collins' Bay school had their jubilee concert. On entering the school room every one was impressed by the loyalty displayed in the decorations of maple leaves, wild flowers, bouquets, mottoes and banners. The chair was taken by Mr. Frank Marshall, a former teacher, and he made an ideal chairman too. The programme, consisting of essays, recitations, readings and songs of patriotic nature such as Red White and Blue, Maple Leaf Forever was rendered in a manner which surprised as well as delighted the parents and friends, as the time had been limited as to preparation. The essays especially were of a very high order, all treating on the life and reign of our Gracious Queen. The chairman recommended that they be kept and filed away. The trustees, Messrs. Rankin and Losee, both gave patriotic addresses. Mr. Rankin said we all should be proud to live under the British flag. Mr. Losee was equally patriotic, and ended his address by giving a song for the benefit of the children. Another feature of this gathering was the hanging of the portrait of the Queen in the school, which was overarched by a wreath of maple leaves and flowers. The teacher and pupils received great praise for the skilful manner in which the room was decorated. After the programme was completed Mr. Rankin and Mr. Losee made the hearts of the little ones glad by a liberal treat of sweetmeats. When these had been distributed Mr. Rankin proposed that three cheers should be tendered to the Queen, and it was lustily responded to. The performances were closed by singing the national anthem.

Miss Hattie Wartman wheeled to the Bay on the 22d.

Miss Alma Grass and Miss Annie Patterson spent Saturday in the city.

Mr. B Perry, of Cobourg, spent Monday at his parents.

CONWAY.

(For last issue.)

On Tuesday evening, the 22d ult., on the eve of the departure of Rev. E. S. Shorey and family from this circuit, a large number of friends and neighbors from the Adolphustown circuit gathered at the parsonage to say good-bye. A special hour was spent in social intercourse. Refreshments were served. The most important part of proceedings was the presenting of an address to the Rev. E. S. Shorey as an expression of the high regard in which he is held on this circuit.

Rev. E. S. SHOREY, Conway.

Dear Pastor.—Your many friends on the Adolphustown circuit are met here this evening to express our high appreciation of your life and labors in our midst. Many can look back to former years when you were pastor on this circuit, and it heightens our sense of obligation to you that lengthened acquaintance has but proved to increase the love and respect in which you and your family have always been held. These present years have been years of peace and prosperity to us as a circuit, and there is fixed in our hearts an affection for you which will not weaken as years go by. Your discretion and good judgment have been most commendable, your sympathy has been genuine. Your daily walk and conversation have commended to us the excellence of the gospel which you have faithfully proclaimed. The high character of your pulpit ministrations have made the services of the sanctuary seasons of delight and profit, and it is not too much to say that your influence upon us for good by the grace of God will be felt throughout our lives. And what we express of esteem and affection to you we extend with equal cordiality to your excellent wife and helpmate, Mrs. Shorey, who has always been deeply interested in promoting the Master's cause. We regret that the expiration of the pastoral term necessitates the severance of our present relation of pastor and people. We shall follow you with our prayers and best wishes that the blessing of God may attend your ministry in every place to which the call of the Master may direct.

Signed.

M. Hough. Thomas Wilkins,
Duncan Hough. E. H. Wright.
C. W. Wright. George Phippen.

Conway, June 22d, 1897.

The address called forth a suitable and appreciative reply. The Queen's jubilee was not forgotten and the singing of the national anthem brought the evening to a close.

An Ode to Central Park, New York.

Here in the heart of the city, the greatest
Between the two oceans,
Here in the centre of multitudes vast
Of humanity thronging,
Here when the winds from the ocean
Wreathe over magnificent mansions,
Is a second blest "Garden of Eden,"
A vision of heavenly beauty.

Here we find tropical splendour, and
Here too Canadian forest,
Here the palmetto and pine tree in
Beautiful harmony growing;
Here we have patches of prairie, and
Beautiful musical fountains,
Here a diminutive picture of Switzerland's
Lakes and her mountains.

Down the dim aisles of the forest, or
Up on the flower-decked roadway,
Through the grand halls of the museum
Adorned with magnificent paintings,
Or on through the wondrous menagerie
Of animals mighty and horrible,
Rich men and poor go together, all equal
In right of possession. —OREN H. SCOUTEN.

On Sunday 20th, a magnificent celebration of Her Majesty's Jubilee was held at St. Luke's church, Camden East, at 11 o'clock. A large parade of the different societies of the village and adjoining villages formed, and headed by the Yarker brass band, proceeded to the church where a very eloquent discourse was given by the Rev. F. D. Woodcock, pointing out the advancements that had been made during the Victorian era, and was attentively listened to with deep interest, manifesting the esteem in which the pastor is held The church was beautifully decorated and was filled to overflowing, one half scarcely being seated During the offertory the band played in fine style "God save the Queen" and the whole congregation rising, sang heartily. Too much credit cannot be paid the band boys for the able way they discoursed their music, and it is not in the far future, when Yarker band will be one of prominence. The services throughout will remain in the hearts of the people as a souvenir of the 60th year of our Sovereign's reign, and when old St. Luke's church is gone and replaced by a new one, this day will be remembered.

The Suffering and Crushed in Spirit

Need Words of Cheer

Their Only Avenue of Escape Is Through Paine's Celery Compound.

True words of encouragement, hope and cheer are generally welcomed by suffering humanity—at least by that part of it with crushed spirits and despondent hearts.

To those who are martyrs from rheumatism and neuralgia we have a few words of honest advice, which, if followed, will certainly lead to that coveted goal—perfect health—that many are so earnestly praying to reach

Up to the present you have failed to banish your rheumatism. The medicines you are using have not removed the floating acid poison from your joints and muscles. You are as bad to-day—perhaps worse—than when you commenced to doctor, and some of you are pronounced incurable.

Cheer up, sad souls! There is hope, yes, more than hope: there is a new life for you and freedom from all pain and agony if you give that heaven-sent remedy, Paine's Celery Compound, a fair and honest trial. It has completely cured the worst forms of rheumatism in the past, and its great and precious virtues will do the same good work for you to-day.

To those who suffer from that merciless tormenter, neuralgia, we say, with all candor, use Paine's Celery Compound, and your future will soon be happy and bright. This disease always indicates a low or depressed vitality, and is the most agonizing and exhausting that can afflict the nervous system. The ablest physicians now freely prescribe Paine's Celery Compound for neuralgia, and affirm that no other medicine can so completely eradicate the cause of this terrible disease.

One bottle of the great health-giving medicine will produce cheering results and will prove that our advice is golden. May heaven give you sufficient faith to make a trial.

KINGSFORD.

Owing to wet weather crops on low lands are nearly drowned out.

Our school is progressing nicely under the able management of Mr. Clark.

A very painful accident occurred here on Friday. While James O'Hara was unhooking the horses from the plough he got badly kicked and has been under the doctor's care ever since. Slight hopes are entertained of his recovery.

Quite a number from here attended the races at Deseronto and report having a good time.

Mrs. Sexsmith is visiting her daughter, Mrs. Edward Brennan.

Leonard Melborne, wife and family, Empey Hill, and Mrs. Parfit and daughter Vera, of Tweed, were the guests of Mr. Andrew Bowen, on Sunday.

Mary Doyle is spending a week at Napanee Mills.

Libbie McAvoy was the guest of Mary Doyle last week.

Andrew Bowen, wife and daughter Cathleen, attended the opening of the new church at Roblin on Sunday.

UNION

Mr. and Mrs. Appell and little son of Rochester, N. Y., are the guests of Mrs. John R. McPherson this week. Miss Ham, of Napanee, is also visiting at Mrs. McPherson's.

What might have proved a serious accident occurred about a week ago, while Mr. Joe Fitchett and brother were going to church. The black mare, known as "trotting Kate" made a lively spurt and landed in the ditch. No serious damage only a shaking up.

Shells are very becoming now for picture frames. The Orangemen are going to have their drum ornamented with them on the 12th. Great preparations are being made. If the weather is hot fans will be in great demand. Boys, buy a fan for your girls on that day.

Isaac Walker is the staff of life in this neighborhood. He furnishes the people with good fresh bread at all hours.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Gibson, of Pittsburgh, were visiting at his mother's, Mrs. Robt. Gibson.

Mrs. Killoran, of Peninsula Point, N. J., is at her mother's, Mrs. Gilchrist.

What might have proved a fatal accident occurred here on Friday last. Mr. and Mrs. Albert Doller were at the postoffice, and the horse broke the bridle and ran away, breaking the buggy and throwing Mrs. Doller and the lady out. The child was not injured, but that cannot be said of the mother. She is severely cut and bruised. Dr. Ward was summoned and did all he could for the sufferer, who is now on a fair way to recovery.

Mrs. Gibson has been very ill. Dr. Ward is in attendance. She is improving slowly.

We have this week to chronicle another death, in the person of Mrs. B B Vanslyck, which took place on Friday evening. Rev. Shorey preached a beautiful sermon on the occasion on Sunday. She will be greatly missed.

PLEVNA.

Never were people more surprised since Gen. Wolfe made his appearance on the plains of Abraham than they were on the 17th ult, very early in the morning, to see our merchant, Mr. G. Ostler, and his young bride, Miss Clara Bell, of Ompah, in his store. No person had any knowledge when nor whence they came.

Owing to frost and wet weather corn will stand a narrow chance of being a crop this season. All other crops are looking well.

The reports from the gold and mica mines in his place are so heavy it is hard to keep milk sweet

To save horses and other hard labor Carl and Brothers have dumped in at foot of the mill slide three car loads, one of pump timber for Colebrooke factory, and two of plank and ties for Rathbun's, Deseronto. Joe says if wind and lies on the lakes are favorable he will get to the R. R. bridge in two weeks, where it will be taken out and loaded on the cars.

HAWLEY.

Hurrah!, hurrah! for our Queen, was all that could be heard on Sunday, Monday, and Tuesday. Everybody joined together in wishing Queen Victoria long life and for the remainder of her years a life of peace. Our best wishes are, Long may she live. God save our Queen.

Our base ball club has been organized with the intention of a bright future. Our boys are boys of pluck, and when they agree to play the printers or any other club you will find them on time. With a few weeks' practice they will be ready for challenges. They are known as the Maple Leafs.

Mr. Thomas Marsh, of Kentucky, is here visiting his brother Joseph, this week.

School has been closed for the summer.

Visitors this week: Miss Farley, sister of our esteemed friend, Mrs. J. O. Fretts, accompanied by Miss Brown and Mr. Austin Dinnick, of Toronto, were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. J. O. Fretts; Mrs. Belfour and daughter Myrtle, of Sandhurst, at Mrs. S. Craven's.

Do what you will, we can't be beat, flags were flying at a great rate all week.

Miss Carrie Hawley and Lily Fretts had their houses decorated with Union Jacks.

The entertainment by the Misses Hawley was a success. The quilt was won by Miss Ethel Hawley. It is a valuable one.

There never was, and never will be, a universal panacea, in one remedy, for all ills to which flesh is heir—the very nature of many curatives being such that were the germs of other and differently seated diseases rooted in the system of the patient—what would relieve one ill, in turn would aggravate the other. We have, however, in Quinine, when obtainable in a sound unadulterated state, a remedy for many and grevious ills. By its gradual and judicious use, the frailest systems are led into convalescence and strength, by the influence which Quinine exerts on Nature's own restoratives. It relieves the drooping spirits of those with whom a chronic state of morbid despondency and lack of interest in life has become a disease, and, by tranquilizing the nerves disposes to sound and refreshing sleep—imparts vigor to the action of the blood, which, being stimulated, courses throughout the veins, strengthing the healthy animal functions of the system, thereby making activity a necessary result, strengthing the frame, and giving life to the digestive organs, which naturally demand increased substance—result, improved appetite. Northrop & Lyman, of Toronto, have given to the public their superior Quinine Wine at the usual rate, and, gauged by the opinion of scientists, this wine approaches nearest perfection of any in the market. All druggists sell it.

GOOD COOKERY

Soft Ginger Bread.—Two eggs, one cup of molasses, one-half cup of butter, one-half cup of sour milk, one teaspoonful of soda, one teaspoonful of baking powder, one teaspoonful of ginger; flour to make batter like cake.

Preserved Strawberries.—Allow half a pound of white crushed sugar to each pound of berries. Put the berries in a porcelain kettle, mashing them to extract the juice. Cook for fifteen minutes, stirring constantly to prevent burning. Add the sugar and boil hard for one minute. Dip the glass jar for the berries in hot water, putting it in sidewise so it will not crack. Then stand the jar in hot water and pour in the preserves while hot. Fill to the brim and screw on the cover which should also be dipped in boiling water.

PERILS OF THE OCEAN

TERRIBLE STORY OF THE NEWFOUNDLAND COAST.

A Norwegian Barque Founders—The Captain and Five Others Drowned—Safety of the Training Ship Lark.

Portsmouth, June 26.—The training brig Sea Lark, concerning whose safety anxiety was expressed, as she was due here on Thursday last from Queen's Ferry, in order to take part in the naval review of Saturday reached Spithead safely to-day. The brig had been disabled in a gale, and had also been delayed by head winds.

Quebec, June 26.—A sad story of death in the ocean and the noble devotion of a captain and some of his crew, was received here to-day when the steamship Antwerp City arrived up with twelve shipwrecked men on board the sole survivors of the crew of the barque Magnhild, which was lost off Newfoundland on the 9th inst. The barque Magnhild, of Christiania, Capt. Tolefsen, a wooden vessel of 1,461 tons, sailed from Philadelphia with a cargo of 1,800 tons of anthracite for this port.

Up to the morning of the 21st she experienced fair weather, but on that day, when about 70 miles north of the Bird rocks, off Newfoundland, she encountered dense fog, and the vessel lay to. Soon afterwards a heavy wind from the southeast raised a big sea, and she rolled heavily. Being caught in the trough of the sea the cargo shifted, and the vessel turned over on her lee side, being thrown upon her beam ends. The water came half way up the deck, and as a last resort the masts were cut away, but in their fall they crushed two of the boats, and also ripped up the deck. The captain, considering the position perilous, ordered the long boat, which was the only sound boat left, to be launched. When they were seated the captain refused to embark, and remarked to the other five, who included the first mate:—

"The boat will swamp if we go on board and we may as well die here as anywhere."

Seeing that the danger became every moment more imminent, the boat reluctantly pulled off, under command of the second mate. Ten minutes later the Maynhild gave a heavy lurch and slowly disappeared. The first mate was seen by the boat's crew clinging to a large hatch, and an effort was made to reach him. The wind, however, was too heavy, and they drifted apart and soon were separated. This occurred at one p.m. on Monday, and for twenty-four hours the boat tossed about at the mercy of the waves. Then the steamship Antwerp City sighted her and picked up the men. Although some of the crew hope that the mate may yet be picked up, others are sure that he was swept off the hatch.

The missing men, who it is morally certain are drowned, are: Captain Tollafsen; first mate, H. A. Hansen; steward, Hans Wickner; cook, Wilhelm Jorsensen, able seamen, Alex. Sjogren, Carl Carpenter.

The survivors have been taken charge of by the Norwegian Consul here, Mr. Schwartz. They had very little hardship before being rescued.

How the Woodchuck Was Named.

Once upon a time the animals lived in a country to themselves and had a king to rule over them. Some hares had a burrow near to that of a ground hog, who made himself odious by digging and throwing dirt back on their premises, stopping up their doors and filling the little hares' eyes with sand. This coming to the ears of the king, the ground hog was warned not to let it happen again, whereupon he sulkily retorted that he "would chuck" his dirt where he —— pleased; hence the name "woodchuck."—J. H. Kennedy in Harper's Magazine.

DR. JACK'S WIFE

By ST. GEORGE RATHBORNE

Author of "Dr. Jack," "Captain Tom," "Miss Caprice," Etc., Etc.

Quick to comprehend the situation, and not deigning to call for help, Doctor Jack's wife had opened her satchel and secured the revolver given to her long ago by the man who had also taught her how to use it.

Then leaving her seat, she glided to the rear portion of the car.

Looking into the smoking compartment, which Larry had pre-empted as his own private "den," Avis is just in time to discover a dark faced man examining into the sacred mysteries of the dude's valise, while a comrade, half way through the window, seems ready to receive whatever spoils may be discovered.

Avis Evans has no difficulty in making up her mind that these men are engaged in something that does not concern them; she does not stop to speculate upon the facts—it is enough to understand that they mean robbery.

A movement which she makes attracts the attention of the man in the window, who, uttering a sharp exclamation, drops out of sight. His companion, attracted by the cry, glances upward, and suddenly remembers an engagement he has in another quarter, of such importance that he hardly knows whether he goes through the window head or feet first.

Doctor Jack's brave wife having thus disposed of the rascals, busies herself in closing the window of the car, which task she has hardly completely when her husband and his friends enter again; at the same time their progress is resumed.

Jack is able to put two and two together, and the result is one that satisfies him.

"At least we leave a couple of our enemies behind," he reflects, though forced to confess his ignorance regarding the number of foes ahead.

CHAPTER XXVI.

Once more their speed is as swift as the wind that whistles down from the defiles of the mountains.

The time lost will soon be made up, for the express train ahead cannot begin to [illegible] speed as they do, so there is a constant gaining on their part.

It is possible to figure out a victory again, unless their enemies hatch up some new trick of deviltry to baffle them, which Jack [illegible] for. He believes the red lantern of warning was only placed on the track to alarm those on board the special simply because Doctor Jack's wife was present. Only for this the special would have plunged into destruction, striking a broken rail when going at the rate of a mile a minute, means no more than death—annihilation.

Avis hears no more.

She is thoroughly interested in the events going on around her, for what concerns Jack interests her. She listens and even offers suggestions at times, which more than once appear to be timely and are readily seized upon by Jack.

All of them note the passage of time now, and figure on results. When the special is at last once at a station for new orders, Jack takes advantage of the short delay to ask questions, learning that the Rocky Mountain Overland Flyer express passed this point just twenty-five minutes before, being an hour and ten minutes late.

This is cause for congratulation, since they have reduced the lead thus far more than half, and it begins to look as though before a great while their end will be attained.

The night wears on.

Several times something occurs to delay them, but Doctor Jack shows no signs of despair. He feels that his clutch is a long and sure one—victory must come.

When morning arrives it finds them in a wild part of the mountains. They have left the green valleys behind. On either side frown the walls of great canons through which the train dashes.

So close [illegible] they upon the heels of the regular train that the engineer is compelled to keep a sharp lookout lest he run by accident into the express.

When the latter stops at the next station they are not far behind, and possibly able to [illegible].

Jack [illegible] their speed.

"[illegible] we could keep this up until New York is reached. There would be [illegible] of not being on [illegible] the car swings like [illegible] around sudden curves [illegible] Avis utters a low cry, [illegible] over, which, of course [illegible].

Then the whistle announces that they are [illegible] near the station. The conductor has drawn their attention to smoke [illegible] above in the canon, which he says was left by the locomotive drawing the regular train.

Heads are thrust from the car windows as they [illegible] the mountains—the station is [illegible] beyond with a good many cars around it. A freight has stopped upon a siding to let the regular passenger pass, but their eyes are seeking something [illegible].

"[illegible]" exclaims Larry, and all of them can see a line of passenger coaches beside the station.

"Confusion! not the engine heads this way," cries Kirke Smith.

"You're wrong, comrade. That is the locomotive of the freight just peeping out beyond the last Pullman," puts in Doctor Jack, whose sight is better than that of either companion.

Avis seconds him, and all feel like cheering as they run down the line and overtake the Overland Flyer, which has remained at the station five minutes under orders to await the arrival of the special.

There are some passengers on board who note the coming of this latter with anything but pleasure. Indeed, the deepest chagrin would be more apt to describe their feelings, since they have endeavored by every dishonorable means possible to keep Doctor Jack from traveling east on the only train that can possibly take him to New York by November fourth. Some people, indeed nearly all persons would have given up in despair when these difficulties arose like insurmountable barriers before them; but we have seen how one man succeeded in riding over the worst and wins his Waterloo here at the station.

The special comes to a stop, and a transfer is soon made. This time they do not have a car to themselves, but there is plenty of room. Doctor Jack will not be crowded, and, if necessary, he would have engaged the sleeper which the special engine drew to take them on to Ogden and even Denver.

Once more [illegible]

He knows he is now on board the same train as his foes. Milord and Colonel Garcia are in the Pullman with them. The latter looks out of the window when our party passes, but the unabashed Englishman, with a spy-glass in his left optic, eyes them questioningly, much to Larry's unbounded admiration, for he is able to pick up an idea or so here.

Jack has time to think matters over. He believes his enemies, who have combined against him, will not give up the ship as long as he is west of New York.

They have too much at stake to give up until the last prop is knocked away. The Chilians are banded by their league to fight for the possession of the packet, or at least to keep Doctor Jack out of New York until the day which he has set upon reaching the metropolis has passed. Lord Rackett is urged on by his passions, and the vow he made to wed the widow of the American athlete.

Even bitter enemies can travel in luxurious Pullman cars, and not come in contact. The battle may be one of looks and sneers.

Toward the land of the rising sun this trans-continental train speeds. Doctor Jack has a head on his shoulders that is worth something. When they take on a new locomotive, he is on deck and has a little chat with the driver. Perhaps a gold piece changes hands. At any rate, they all fancy the man of nerve, and the long train whirls from station to station on time.

"You must be a wizard, Doctor Jack," remarks the Pullman conductor, laughing. "It is many a day since I have gone through here with such a snap and vim. We start each time as though we meant business, but something throws us out of gear. Now, it is like a well-oiled piece of machinery."

"Why do you lay it to me?" smiling.

"Ah! I have eyes, sir. The fact of your hiring a special told us you particularly desired to get east on this train. Sometimes golden oil lubricates machinery remarkably well."

Night comes.

Jack has kept an eye on those whom he has reason to watch, while his companions also remain on guard. Avis carries the packet now, in her small satchel, which is fastened by a strap over her shoulder. Who gets it must first kidnap Doctor Jack's wife.

More than once he has seen three men in consultation, and knows full well that they mean mischief.

To delay him they would even wreck the express train, if it could be done without great danger to themselves. He has warned the conductor, so that in all probability sharp eyes will be upon the plotters, and they may be frustrated; but such desperate men halt at nothing when determined to carry a point.

Of course, Jack must sleep, but he has arranged with his companions for a system of watches, each one to remain on the lookout several hours.

It is past midnight when Jack feels a hand touch him. He is only dozing, for the section has not been made up, though the curtains are drawn.

Putting out his head, he sees Larry. The lamps are turned low in the car. Sounds of heavy breathing indicate that a number of persons at least are asleep.

The train is at a stand.

"What is it, Larry?" asks the doctor, quietly.

"They're up to some mischief, I'm afraid. Three of them went outside," comes the reply.

Jack is immediately on the alert, and passes to the door, touching the sleeping Texan as he goes, and making a movement with his fingers that Kirke readily understands.

Larry follows Jack, while the Texan remains to watch Avis, to guard her if need be against lurking danger, and he will do it if any man can.

As soon as the doctor steps from the car, he glances around to see where they are. The night is dark, but several lights burn at the station.

A red lantern has halted the train, and upon making inquiries it is learned that some sort of accident has happened ahead that may delay them a while.

Doctor Jack begins to think fortune has leagued itself with his enemies, for he cannot believe this accident has been caused through any plans of theirs. He walks up and down the platform, counting the minutes, sometimes passing from the light into the shadow.

Larry is seated on the step of the sleeper watching his friend.

The impatient engine throbs, and occasionally steam escapes with a savage hiss. Precious minutes are being lost, which must be made up again.

Larry is anxious, too, though he fairly succeeds in disguising the fact by an apparently cool demeanor as he smokes his cigarette.

Suddenly he becomes aware of a certain fact that gives him a spasm of alarm. Doctor Jack has walked into the shadow, and, although three times twenty seconds—the usual length of his turn in the darkened spot—have passed, he does not appear in view.

CHAPTER XXVII.

Larry has seen nothing suspicious, nor has he heard any hostile sound. The hissing of steam from the iron monster at the head of the train would prevent this latter, and prove a splendid cover under which a desperate deed might be carried out.

At the same time, owing to the peculiar circumstances of the case, Larry fears that something has happened; that the thread which holds the sword of Damocles suspended over the head of Doctor Jack has been severed.

He leaves his seat, and with a hand on a weapon steps into the shadow. The glance he casts around him fails to bring any reward, since Jack is not in sight.

Larry's alarm increases. Now he draws his revolver, and hurries to the end of the platform. Once he fancies he hears voices, and starts in that direction, but it turns out to be a couple of trainmen conversing.

A man is under the cars with a light and a hammer, testing the wheels, for with these fast trains it is necessary to take every possible precaution in order to prevent accidents.

Larry's coolness vanishes. He even drops his beloved cigarette, such is his anxiety to discover what has become of his friend. While he thus prances about, not daring to wander far from the train, as it may move at any minute the signal comes that the track is clear, he catches sight of a moving figure.

That is enough. In the darkness he cannot tell whether it be friend or foe, but, rushing up, he thrusts his weapon against the man's side, while saying fiercely:—

"Surrender!"

"Why, Larry, old fellow, is it you?" comes a voice.

"Jack—thank heavens. But you gave me a scare, man. What made you stwoll away?"

Jack seems to be engaged in coiling up a rope, and Larry, when he discovers this, is doubly amazed.

"They tried it, Larry—and failed. Just as I stepped into the shadow a noose fell over my shoulders. I happened to have one hand up to my hat, so that was free to draw a knife while I jumped forward in order to prevent being thrown. The fellows at the other end ran also. I got my knife out, opened the blade with my teeth, and cut the noose; but I caught hold of the rope, planted my feet against a rock, and we had a tug of war for a minute here in the darkness.

"Finding I was too much for them, and was dragging the rope in, they gave up and scampered, leaving me this trophy, which I hardly know what to do with."

"Take it aboard. Who knows how useful it may yet prove. Besides, it may tell us something about the fellow at the other end."

"Larry, correct. Was that whistle meant for a forward movement?"

They run to the platform close at hand. The train moves, sure enough. After all, the delay was not so long, and can be made up.

When they get into the car neither the Chilian colonel nor his British ally can be seen.

"Egad!" says Larry, slapping his knee, "what a widiculous joke it would be if we turned the tables on them, and they are left behind."

Jack smiles.

"That would be too good a thing, my dear boy."

He sees Avis looking out from behind the curtains, and motioning with her hand. Jack fancies she seems pale. He springs to her side.

"What is it, dear?" he asks, tenderly.

"Jack, while I slept a hand entered the half-open window and snatched the small satchel. I caught the strap, but the catch broke and the hand-bag is—gone."

Jack smothers a groan, and Avis continues quickly:—

"But, dear Jack, some good angel must have put it into my head that they coveted that alligator bag, for when the curtains were first put up I transferred the packet—"

"Oh! Avis!"

"To my bosom, where it lies now, safe and sound."

He throws his arms around her.

"Bless you for a thoughtful little woman. They stand a poor show against both of us with Larry and Kirke thrown in."

"It was also fortunate that I had my jewelry on. In fact, the contents of the bag, I believe, netted them some five dollars."

"They're welcome to it. Why, the rope must be worth part of that," laughing.

"What rope, Jack?"

"They tried to hang me, my dear," and he relates his little adventure, while Avis clings to him, trembling and breathless.

"When will this end, husband?" she asks, for her nerves have been placed under a severe test during these few weeks.

"Given four and a half more days and we will arrive in New York. Once there my hour of triumph comes, and these allied forces will no longer have cause to desire my downfall."

"Oh, Jack, I wish we were there!" she sighs.

"For your sake I echo the wish, little woman," fondly replies the man of steel.

"I am so afraid something will happen to you."

"Ah, Avis, look back, my dear! You have seen me in many situations of danger. Was I ever outgeneraled? A cool head and a steady hand have carried me successfully thus far, and with the help of heaven they will not desert me now."

Cheered by these brave words, Avis regains much of her old-time confidence. This stout heart has so often won victories, it is no wonder she believes her Jack well-nigh invincible.

Larry comes up at this moment, with a disconsolate look upon his face.

"It's no use," he says, sadly, shaking his head as he speaks.

"What's wrong now, Larry?" asks Jack.

"They swung on at the last moment—in the smoking-room, now."

"Sorry to hear it, but it's what we expected. So far we've been a good match for all their forces. Let us hope it will keep on."

The balance of the night passes without more trouble, and our friends greet the new-born day with thankfulness.

Each hour takes them nearer their goal, and the enemy must continue to grow more desperate as time passes.

It occurs to Jack that perhaps he can turn the tables on these plotters. By leaving them behind, he will at least be free from their miserable plotting, and have a fair chance to show up in New York on time.

In Larry he has an enthusiastic ally when the idea is broached. Indeed, the little man can see no reason why they should not count on it as already settled.

"I believe in fair play. So far they've had all the fun. By Jove! it's our turn now. Let me ponder over the matter, too. Perhaps I can hatch up a plan."

The mighty intellect of the dude sets to work, and, of course, Jack takes a back seat after that. Kirke is passing away the time by wandering along the entire length of the train, where, of course, he finds many types of human nature. His object is to discover, if possible, how many of the Chilians are on board, men who have come so many thousand miles to outwit Doctor Jack.

Avis is watching her cousin, and she suddenly gives Jack a nudge.

"I think Larry has discovered something," is what she says, and glancing at the dude, Jack finds him with a broad smile upon his face, a veritable grin.

"Ah! he's looking at himself in the glass between the windows. These fellows of his stamp are conceited enough. No doubt he believes he has a killing expression on his face."

"That's too bad, Jack, for he's looking out of the window. Larry has a great mind for schemes, though, perhaps, you wouldn't think it to look at him. I know he has just hit upon some elegant idea. There, I told you so. He's coming over to give us the benefit of it."

"As true as I live, it's so. If I faint during the recital, dear Avis, remember—the cordial."

"You cruel man—but I know you have in secret a high opinion of Larry's abilities, though you may pretend to laugh now and then."

The arrival of the object under consideration at their seat prevents any further conversation. Larry it is, puffing out his cheeks with tremendous importance.

"I've got an idea, my dear boy. Wait until you hear it—then congratulate me."

"With pleasure," returns the other.

Larry glances around him. He does not care to share his bright thoughts with those who may be enemies, and they are known to have a number of this class on board the limited train.

The coast seems clear, yet Larry assumes a voice equal to a dramatic stage whisper in imparting his momentous secret.

"I believe I can dwop the wascals behind, and give them a chance to hire a special," he announces, at which Avis gently claps her hands, and Jacks says: "Bravo, dear boy."

Larry tries to swell out with more importance, but it is impossible, since he has already reached the point of danger.

"Now, listen to me, my friends, while I explain my idea. Of course, it must hold until night comes. Jack will get the exact time we stop at some station. Timing himself, he will leave the car. These men can be depended on to follow. Jack must lead them a little chase, give them the slip, and run back to the twain as fast as he can. The second he puts his foot on the step, the conductor will start ahead."

"Ah! how d'ye know he will?"

"Because you must have an arrangement with him beforehand, dear boy. That little part of my plan I have left to your ingenuity."

"I'll wrestle with it, and endeavor to do my duty," says Jack, in mock humility.

"That's one scheme."

"What! you have others, Larry?"

"Jove, dear boy, hosts of them. They bristle like quills on the back of the fretful porcupine. Here's an idea that might come in later. We could arrange for a special to be ready at Denver, where we lost half an hour. It would take us to St. Louis in time to catch a twain in advance of the one regularly made."

Jack opens his eyes at this.

"Bless me, a splendid thought. If it comes to the worst I'll have a talk with the conductor about it. What else, my dear fellow?"

Larry has only started. He begins to describe certain unique plans for accomplishing the desired result, some of them so very original, that Doctor Jack is fairly staggered.

"Hold on, I beg of you! Don't bewilder me. Talk about your Cardinal Richelieu. He couldn't hold a candle to Larry Kennedy," and he really means what he says this time.

"Then you will accept and twy one of these plans?" asks the proud inventor, twisting his diminutive whiskers with the air of a conqueror.

"All of them, Larry, in time, if necessary. But first we will endeavor to leave our friends, the enemy, to-night, with the aid of the conductor. There he comes, now. I'll talk with him a while."

CHAPTER XXVIII.

The conductor is, of course, inclined to be non-committal. He has heard much of Doctor Jack's story, and is deeply interested, ready to do all in his power to assist him, and yet at the same time fully aware that his duty will not allow him to swing trains at the whim of a passenger. All Jack desires, at present, is the assurance that there will be no holding the train a minute or two in order to allow belated ones a chance to get aboard.

Here the iron rules of the road, which the conductor could not break for him, work in his favor.

"When the time is up we start, if there are a dozen Englishmen wandering about," he says, firmly, and Jack builds upon this.

He also speaks about the special at Denver, and has the official figure to see whether it would count him anything at St. Louis.

Thus the day passes.

With the coming of night, Doctor Jack prepares to carry out his little plan whereby he will possibly shake off the worst foes for a while.

They draw near the town where a short stop will be made. Jack knows just how long. Even now the engine gives a long signal whistle to warn the people of their coming.

"Be very careful," pleads Avis, looking a little anxious, as her husband shows some eagerness to be off.

"Don't be alarmed, dear. I shall keep just ahead of them, and lead them a wild-goose chase. Even if they should try to overhaul me, they are only two, and I am well armed, you know."

She looks proudly at him. Memory carries her back to many a scene where her Jack proved himself a man in every particular. She has seen him master a black bull in the plaza de los toros, at Madrid, when no matador dared enter the ring—has watched him beat back a mob of rascals who waylaid the train by which they passed over the Pyrenees, and been nearby when he saved her brother from the vengeance of a Turkish pasha, meeting the Russian wolf-hounds in the garden of the palace and wresting victory from what promised to be defeat.

All these and many other similar scenes flash before her mental vision. No wonder she has the utmost confidence in this man who twists difficulties that are seemingly insurmountable to his will.

He waits after the train stops, just two minutes, timing himself so as to hit it just right. Lord Rackett and Garcia have alighted to stretch their legs. Larry reports that they are watching through the window, as though they do not mean to take their eyes off the little party.

Doctor Jack arises. He gravely kisses his wife good-by, shakes hands with his two friends, walks to the end of the car, and steps off.

Lord Rackett and Garcia have apparently already taken the alarm, for they are not in sight. Jack strides away. His manner is that of one who travels no more at present.

"What success?" asks Avis, eagerly, as Larry comes back to her side.

"The best, I believe. At any rate, I saw two dark forms gliding after him."

Doctor Jack's wife cannot help from showing anxiety, no matter what unlimited confidence she puts in him.

"What time is it, Larry?"

He consults his chronometer.

"Seven and a half after nine."

"And we leave here?"

"At exactly nine-ten."

There remains two and a half minutes. Hours could not ordinarily seem longer to this devoted wife. There are times when we measure the passage of seconds by heart beats—when even a minute may seem an eternity.

Larry walks up and down, trying to smother his own impatience, while Kirke Smith is on the platform keeping an eye about.

At length Larry walks to the end of the car. The time is about up. A few more seconds and the train must start if the conductor is as prompt as he has promised to be.

A hand touches Larry's shoulder, and, turning, he sees Avis, who has been unable to remain in the car, when so much is at stake.

"Surely the time must be up," she says.

"Just."

Even as Larry utters the word, there is a whistle from the engine, a jerk of the cars—they move.

Doctor Jack's wife holds her breath.

If he has made a mistake of three seconds, Jack will not only leave his enemies behind, but be caught in the same trap.

The train moves slowly at first, being a long one, but the momentum increases.

"There he comes!" exclaims Larry.

A figure appears in view at the farther end of the station platform; a figure that delays not a second, but rushes across the lighted space after the train with a speed equal to a young cyclone; a figure that the eyes of the loving wife instantly recognize as Jack.

Will he reach the last car? The train moves faster each second, but Doctor Jack has not yet put forth his best efforts, though rapidly annihilating the space that separates them.

Now he makes a spurt—encouraged by the presence of Avis, whom he sees. Five feet only separate him from the platform, but the train is going at a lively rate.

Another burst of speed; two feet remain. He puts out his hand; a fall now must mean ruin to his hopes; but Jack is light on his feet.

Kirke Smith stands on the steps. He holds on to the rail, bends forward and reaches out his horny hand, which Doctor Jack instantly seizes upon.

Another second and the daring runner has swung himself upon the back platform of the last car. He has won.

Avis throws her arms about her husband.

"Oh, Jack!" she says, with a long breath. "I began to fear you would lose the race. It was a terrible moment of suspense," at which the doctor, though exceedingly short of breath just at the time, is compelled to laugh, as the ludicrous side of the matter appears before him.

"How did you succeed? Were you followed?" asks the Texan, eagerly.

"Two shadowy figures kept after me up to the time when I gave them the slip, and made a bolt for the train. They could not have gotten aboard—simply impossible—I ran as fast as I could, and had a narrow escape, as you have all seen."

"By Jove! look yondah!" exclaims Larry, at this juncture, and all turn their eyes backward over the road bed.

They are now quite a distance from the station. Nearly an eighth of a mile, and making good time that momentarily grows faster.

The track chances to be straight, so that they can readily see the well-lighted platform and all its immediate surroundings.

Even as they look in response to Larry's call, two figures come dashing upon the boards. They are men who thus run, men who have beyond a doubt been left by the train; men who even run up the track some distance, as rattled travelers left behind are apt to do, in the vain hope of overhauling the train that has given them the slip.

Of course, the distance is too great for our friends to make them out, but they are almost positive as to the identity of the men who have been dropped so neatly.

Larry in particular is greatly tickled over the discomfiture of the enemy. He takes off his hat and makes a bow in the direction of the stragglers.

"Farewell — farewell — the best of friends must part!" he says, dramatically, and, of course, the two figures, now growing shadowy in the dim distance, answer not a word.

Doctor Jack regains his breath after a little while. They are speeding along over the open prairie now, the town having been left behind, and as the night air is decidedly chilly, it is deemed proper that they seek for warmth and comfort inside the car.

Jack has already told in a few sentences how he managed to outwit the two men who followed him so closely. It is not his habit to boast, and those who hear what he has to say must draw upon their own imaginations to fill in the story.

Larry walks forward to indulge in a smoke, for the car has been turned around during the day, and the little compartment is no longer at the rear.

A few minutes later they see him hastening toward them. His expression is really ludicrous. At the same time they can see that the dude has received a shock.

He sinks into a seat opposite Doctor Jack and his wife, who have just arranged with the steward for a little supper, and have a table spread between them.

"What is the matter, man? You look as if you had seen a ghost," says Jack.

"By Jove! two of them, dear boy," gasps Larry, rolling his eyes.

The doctor and Avis exchange glances.

"Now, what in the duse can he mean? Come, Larry, out with it. What have you seen?" the former remarks.

"Tell me, can a man be in two places at the same time?" demands the dude.

"Well, hardly. I've known people to try it, but the attempt generally ended in failure. Why do you ask that? Is it possible—"

Larry jerks his thumb over his shoulder.

"I've found 'em snugly deposited in the smoking-room," he says, laconically.

"Them? Do you mean the Britisher and his Chilian ally?"

Larry nods, unable to say a word.

Doctor Jack looks at his wife again, and laughs. He takes it very coolly, indeed; one would think it might be a great joke with him.

"How can it be possible, when we saw those men lose the train?" Avis asks.

"Ah! my dear, not one of us could declare their identity at that distance. As to the two men who followed me, I only saw them in the dark. It is evident that instead of entering the chase themselves, these worthies, suspecting a trick perhaps, stuck by the train and sent the two Chilians who have come under their orders after me."

"Then it was all useless?"

"Not so. We have reduced the number of our foes by two. That is something to feel good over. I believe Lord Rackett and Garcia are all we have to watch now, and by my next coup d'etat I hope to get rid of them."

"You have wesolved, then—" begins Larry, but his drawl is so labored that Jack, as is often the case, finishes the sentence for him.

"To have a special awaiting our arrival in Denver, on which we shall outstrip the regular train and leave our foes behind."

"Three cheers for Doctor Jack!" but the other's frown causes Larry to restrain his enthusiasm.

CHAPTER XXIX.

Presently the Englishman is seen to look through the car. Larry declares that he seems greatly surprised when his eyes fall upon Doctor Jack, but he returns again to the seclusion of the smoking apartment, where doubtless various schemes are being brought forward between the colonel and himself, having for their object the detention of the American, perhaps even his death.

Having talked the matter over with the others as they pass the time over the little table, Jack proceeds to make out a message which he desires to send ahead, and which will give him a tight squeeze on the game.

Then he waits for the conductor, with whom he has a long talk in the seclusion of the state-room. Sworn to secrecy concerning the facts, this official folds the message up with some bank bills Jack hands over, and then the affair is as good as arranged.

Jack can lie on his oars.

All that is necessary is to watch the enemy and circumvent any move looking to a sly attack from the rear.

When Denver is reached by this transcontinental train, there will be a surprise in store for some people, no doubt.

The schemes of the two allies may embrace a variety of forms, since one wants the secret packet that seems of such immense value to Doctor Jack, while the other covets his wife.

By this time, however, the bull-dog nature of the British nobleman has been fully aroused. He hates Jack with intense fervor. Every victory of the American stirs up the sluggish bad blood in his veins, until he is now in a condition bordering on frenzy, though outwardly cool, and could see the man against whom his anger is kindled burned at the stake with pleasure.

When two such unscrupulous plotters strain their energies in the endeavor to hatch up mischief, the chances are they will arouse something of a commotion.

An hour later the sleeper drops off from the train which goes on and leaves it on the open prairie. Luckily the accident is discovered by the conductor a few minutes later. He happens to look out of a window and sees lights a mile or so in the rear, where no illumination could be expected, pokes his head out still farther, counts the cars, and finds his train one short of the number with which it started.

So he pulls the cord, stops the train, and they back down the track to secure the lost sleeper. Already those on board have become aware of the situation, and crowd the platform. An investigation shows that it has been no accident. Some strong hand uncoupled the cars after detaching the bell-rope and accomplishing other things that are necessary on account of the vestibule.

No one makes any accusation. True, Colonel Garcia was in the smoking compartment, but he was the first to give the alarm, and declares he saw a rough man, whom he took to be a trainman, doing something outside the door, but paid little heed to the matter until the sleeper slowed up, when, looking along the track, he discovered they were left.

Lord Rackett ventures the august opinion that this is the work of train robbers, who intended going through the sleeper when the remainder of the east-bound train had passed from sight.

Some of the passengers grasp this story eagerly. Strange how people want to be connected with some notoriety, especially when it does not cost anything and involves no dangers.

Doctor Jack and Larry exchange a glance, and even the dude's smile is suggestive. Evidently they know just about how that car chanced to be left behind. The rough man was all in the mind of the indignant Garcia.

Again they move forward.

One of the colonel's first acts is to wash his hands, which fact Larry reports with considerable emphasis.

The conductor is suspicious, and during the remainder of the night keeps a close watch upon the sleeper "Diana." It will not redound to his credit to leave a car filled with first-class passengers standing on the main track.

It is a game of diamond cut diamond, now, and as yet Jack seems to be holding his own, yes, and gaining ground continually.

Another dawn and all well. So the day and night pass and Ogden is left far behind.

The train is on time. That golden lubricator appears to be doing its duty remarkably well. There is nothing like it to surmount difficulties when it comes to railroad travel.

"When do we reach Denver?" asks Larry, who begins to weary of this chase against time.

"In a few hours," returns the doctor, handing over the time-table, for they have left Cheyenne.

They are whirled on their way. The great Rockies have been climbed, beyond which lie the prairie lands of the corn-growing states.

Their enemies seem very quiet, but it is at such times the most danger is to be looked for. Perhaps they have engaged in a little surprise of their own, which may be sprung upon the party of Doctor Jack at the moment when least expected.

Denver opens before them

"Get in readiness, Avis, but show no more excitement than if we meant to stop here for a meal like the rest of the passengers," and Jack snaps his valise shut.

"How about our trunks?" she asks, woman like, thinking how terrible it might be to land in New York without her wardrobe.

"They will follow—only a few hours later. We don't dare take the risk of transferring them to the special. My dear girl, you surely know money will provide—"

She puts a hand over his lips, which he immediately kisses.

"Say no more, Jack. I can get on if I never see my trunk again. You know best, dear."

"Denver—half an hour for dinner," cries the brakesman, passing through the car.

The train rolls into the depot, and stops. Around them is the wizard city of Colorado, where in a decade magnificent blocks of business houses and lovely palaces have sprung into existence.

They do not mean to lose any time, but having gathered what few packages they carry, are ready to leave the sleeper as soon as it comes to a stop.

Larry leers at milord, who, standing in the aisle, looks after them with a peculiar expression on his face, and then makes a motion with his arm to Colonel Garcia.

No doubt he is very much surprised at seeing them with their luggage—at least Larry takes this view of it—for a very brief space of time.

They pass out.

The conductor awaits their coming, for he desires to see them win, and at once says:—

"Follow me, Doctor Jack. I will show you where your special lies."

"Gentlemen, I am sorry to detain you, but truth to tell I have a document here that requires your presence at police headquarters," says a tall man, opening his coat and showing a detective's badge, while two blue-coated officers push into view.

Larry's jaw drops, Doctor Jack frowns, at once recognizing a bold move of the enemy.

"Perhaps you have made a mistake," he says, knowing full well, however, that this is not so.

"You are Doctor Jack Evans, of New York?"

"Yes."

"And these gentlemen, Lawrence Kennedy and Kirke Smith—the latter I knew of old in Texas?"

"Quite right. Let us see your warrant."

All of them glance over the document, but Avis notices milord and the Chilian colonel hurry away, though she thinks little of it at the time, believing they are heading for the restaurant connected with the central station.

"There's no disputing the fact that you have authority to take all of us or only one member of the party to headquarters," says Jack, into whose mind a thought has flashed, by means of which he may bridge the difficulty.

How To Avoid Wasting Time and Money.

A word at this time to the ladies of Canada may be the means of putting them on their guard, so that time and money may not be wasted.

There are certain dealers and storekeepers whose life-object is the making of large profits on every article they sell.

These dealers are now endeavoring to sell adulterated and imitation package dyes for the same price as the honest dealer asks for the reliable and never-failing Diamond Dyes.

Few ladies have the inclination to spend time or money to experiment with worthless and poisonous ingredients put up to outwardly imitate the marvellous Diamond Dyes. If you want good work you must use the best dyes. Years of thorough testing proclaim the fact that Diamond Dyes are the strongest, brightest and most economical; they are the only dyes in the world that are specially warranted. Each packet, when directions are followed, will give satisfactory and astonishing results.

Last Monday evening the boys from the surrounding neighborhood gathered in front of the home of Mr. Jno. Schermehorn to try the speed of their horses. While we do not question the boys' right to enjoy their so called pastime, yet we do not think it at all right to make a race course of the public highway while the men and women gathered in groups along the sides of the road.

EASTER MILLINERY.

LEADING FEATURES IN HATS, BONNETS AND TOQUES.

Colored Straws In the Ascendant—Hats Top Heavy With Flowers and Garden Truck—Novel Ribbon Bows, Feather Fantasies and Flower Mounts.

On Easter Sunday matron and maid emerge from the rest Lent gives them, like the butterfly from its chrysalis, with gowns and hats almost as brilliant as the multicolored wings of the insect. Easter fashions set at rest many of the vexatious problems of the earlier season and are awaited with interest by womankind at large. Following is a condensation of an illustrated report of the Easter styles in millinery for 1897, as given in the New York Times:

Headgear this spring is by no means small. The largest hats look top heavy with flowers and "garden truck," and the bonnets and toques, although small, are so built up with sprays, flowers and ribbon bows that what they lose in width they gain in height. The time has passed when white, black or blue straws only may be bought. Today the most delicate shading is procurable.

There can be nothing in the way of millinery which will be more convenient for general use than foundations of white, black or natural straws, for these may always be trimmed according to the wearer's fancy without trespassing on the original color scheme of the costume, but it is the introduction of red in straw, tulle, chiffon, ribbons, feathers and flowers which produces the most startling effect in headgear. The "exclusives," however, having decided that red will be too much worn to please them, show an inclination to use gray, and the best groomed woman this spring will blossom in Quaker shades. It will be impossible for any woman to go far astray in the trimming of hats. There is but one rule, and that is, be certain to put on all the fruit, flowers, ribbons and general trimming that the hat will support.

Among the novelties introduced are bows, flower mounts and fantasies in plumes. Ribbons of plain or striped taffeta are twisted and knotted and finished with loops in bows which give often the smartness to a hat. Effective bows are made by using three or four shades of a color. Flower mounts consist of spring flowers twisted together in bunches which stand high at the side. All flowers which may be "bunched" are available for this kind of trimming. The old style wreath and spray are quite the things of the long ago.

Aigrets and ospreys are innovations in the feather department. Heron plumes and curled ospreys lead as favorites, although some of the mounts of curled cock and duck quills are used with great effect. Another plume which has appeared for the first time in a dozen years is the willow. This in black, white and gray is used on large rolling brim hats, and the soft, willowy feathers are allowed to hang over the sides, falling quite low. Feathers have taken on the same bright hues of flowers.

As to shapes, the variety is great, and hence the rule is to choose the most becoming for the first, the most swagger for the second and the very exclusive model for the third hat. Sailor hats will be in evidence all the season. They are as much a part of the season's fixings as the serge suit and shirt waist. There will be a deviation, however, from their former simplicity, for a band of velvet will be used around the brim of sailors which are intended for afternoon wear, these being a little more trimmed and usually made of Cuba canvas. Toques are in great favor and are made from straw and chip. A sort of Gainsborough hat is one that is very becoming, especially to young faces. This hat is described as an enlarged English walking hat, except that the brim is wider and rolls at the sides. It is the placing of a long feather on the underside of the brim which gives the hat its peculiar chic.

NEW BOWS for NEW HATS

It is a common practice in the Connecticut valley to apply from 300 to 600 pounds of air slaked lime with other tobacco fertilizers a few weeks before planting.

HOME DECORATION.

The Revival of Japanese Decoration—A Cinderella Room.

The use of Japanese decoration, which first became fashionable immediately after the centennial in Philadelphia, has had a revival. Our posters, our fondness for line drawing and for wide, flat washes of color, are distinctly Japanese in origin, and as the fad for these becomes grotesque, the wise decorator goes back to the old art of Japan for fresh inspiration. The Puritan, in this connection, says:

We know more of Japanese art than we once did, and we apply it differently. It does not consist in tacking a few fans and embroideries about the walls, but in an artistic arrangement of objects and lines of decoration, and in a fine simplicity. The orientals have taught us how to put a flower in a vase and how to leave uncovered spaces in our rooms for the eye to rest upon. More than all, they have taught us fine shapes in furniture, and even given us new pieces.

Attention is also called in The Puritan to the pleasing custom of the woman's "own room," a corner in the modern house which is her special domain. An illustration is given showing one such apartment, which was recently designed for a well known New York woman. The story of Cinderella is the motif of its decorations. The walls are covered with painted tapestry telling the old fairy tale, and all the furniture suggests, in some quaint way, the details of Cinderella's adventures. The curtain poles are made after the pattern of the godmother's wand, and in the folds of the net curtains can be seen a cupid holding the magic slipper.

CORNER IN A CINDERELLA ROOM.

The idea is a particularly pretty one and can be carried out in greater or less completeness by any one possessed of the talent for decoration, which appears to be a woman's birthright in these days, whether she has a full purse or not. The Cinderella room is only a single example of what may be done in this line. Another woman has made a Joan of Arc room, where spears and armor and pennons hold up arras painted to represent the story of the maid's life. Another clever woman has a room a la Watteau, where the tapestry looks like huge fans with the quaint old time figures mincing across them.

A Peacock Mantel.

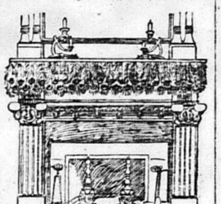
A unique drapery is suggested for a mantel board in The Ladies' Home Journal, along with an illustration of the same: Cover the mantel board with peacock blue velours. Take peacock feathers of equal length and sufficient in number to go around the edge of the board, placing the reed or quill part of the feathers about one inch apart. Tack them on to the board with straw matting staples and afterward cover with a jeweled gimp. The feathers may be secured at the center and ends by weaving through them some strands of silk of peacock blue color.



PEACOCK FEATHER DECORATION.

Concerning Curtains.

Oriental strips and figured curtains are well adapted for hall, staircase and landing windows. Madras muslin or printed frilled curtains are very effective for bedroom drapings, and are much sought after by reason of their artistic colorings. They may be used in summer homes as well. In addition to the foregoing Decorator and Furnisher suggests for lace curtains in the parlor or sitting room the real lace in creponne and guipure d'art. These, being handmade are consequently better adapted for cleaning.

Imitation Jewels.

The wearing of imitation and semiprecious jewels is no longer a social crime. These are freely tolerated in the fashionable world. Especially is this true of Roman pearls, which figure in many necklaces in company with real diamonds.

Things Women Want to Know.

It is fashionable just now to be punctual.

The fad for rich girls is to learn a trade.

Women who do not belong to at least one club are sadly behind the times.

An exchange gives the assurance that smelling salts and wrinkles go together.

It is the proper caper to wear Roman pearls when you can't afford the genuine ones.

In well appointed homes a few well selected books are to be found in the guest room.

Haphazard Jottings.

It is stated that pearl millets are too late to mature seed at the Massachusetts station.

The New Hudson Valley Horticultural society starts with 150 members and fair prospect of a successful career.

A market gardener, writing from New Haven to The New England Homestead, says: "The Southport Globe is the onion in demand in this section, being chalky white, free from cloudiness and a good keeper. This is the only variety that will meet the requirements of the markets."

Rural New Yorker says, "If lime is to be applied to grass land, it is better to do it quite early in the spring before the grass has started."

WOMEN OF TALENTS.

EARLY PRAISE FROM FRIENDS OFTEN DOES GREAT HARM.

A Genius Works For the Whole World. The Approval That Counts and Lasts Comes Only Through Labor—How Many a Good Cook Has Been Spoiled.

"Praise from friends makes us think the whole world approves us."

This is what I heard a very sensible little women say the other day—a woman who has traveled a very up hill path, with little of praise to cheer her on and much of blame to retard her, had she been of the make and mold of most women. But the little woman is a genius, and real genius is wonderfully strong.

She stands among those of the front ranks now. Just what place this sensible woman, who has not had her head turned by the praise that has finally come to her, fills in the world, or along just what lines her talents lie, is not of enough importance to this story to rehearse them all. It is just enough to know that the little woman has succeeded well because she has not spent any time sighing for praise or being foolishly flattered when praise came.

When all women learn that the praise of a little coterie of friends is not "the great wave that rushes round the world" then their work, like the little woman's, which everybody is now ready to commend, will stand the searchlight of the criticism of those who are disinterested enough to be honest.

"Women," says a writer in London Temple Bar, "are just emerging from the egg of suppression. It is a natural fact that, like newly hatched chickens, they should chirp a little just at first. 'There are so few of us who have distinguished ourselves. Why should we not give ourselves serious and responsible airs?' Women are terribly self conscious. Directly one of them attains to celebrity she feels the eyes of the world upon her and she at once ceases to be natural."

This is a rather scathing invective, but every woman must admit it has its grain of truth. I once heard a great editor say that "many a good cook has been spoiled because she thought she could write poetry." This, too, sounds a little harsh, but the great editor had reason for thinking so. For many years he had sat every day in his chair at the big desk in his office and looked over pecks of manuscript, always with the hope of finding something good for his publication. For, whatever may be thought to the contrary, editors seize with avidity all the good things in the way of literature that come their way. And the great editor told me this little story—one of many that he related that day:

"I have never been," said the great editor, "more sorry for any act of my life than I have been over and over again for a little check for $5 I once filled out. I sent it forth in payment for some very neat little verses that just happened to fill a corner that needed filling. It was a dainty little bit of spring verse, written, as I shortly afterward learned, by a young woman not yet past her 'teens,' who lived in a country town.

"She had grown tired of country life—her friends praised her bits of verse, and she thought she was a great writer. When that unlucky little check for $5 came to her that settled it. She took the money and came to the city, leaving a note behind her, telling that she was cut out to 'shine,' or something of that sort, and that she had gone to the city to 'shine.' Of course I was the first one she sought out from all the city full of people. She sent the office boy in to say to me that the 'lady who had written the poem about spring wanted to see him!'

"Thousands of poems about spring had flooded the office ever since the first swallow had put in its appearance, so this was not much of an identification. But I saw the girl, and she wanted me to take her on the staff at once. This, of course, was impossible, and I told her so, advising her to return home and promising her that all she sent in future should have my personal attention. But this she would not do.

"I heard of her some years afterward. She had married a worthless fellow, because she found earning a livelihood in a big city was a very hard thing for an inexperienced girl, and she did not want to return home and admit her failure.

"If I had not sent that little check, perhaps her whole future would have been a different one."

And the great editor nearly sighed. I am glad, though, that he has learned all women are not like this foolish country girl, for he frankly admits that nowadays some of his best and most able contributors are women, and that there are several upon his regular staff.

This small narrative of the great editor's is worthless except that it proves the truth of the editor's assertion that "many a good cook has been spoiled because she thinks she can write," and the little woman's remark that "praise from friends makes us think the whole world approves us," to say nothing of what the writer in Temple Bar has to say about women "chirping."

It is not only through writing verses, essays and what not that foolish little feminine heads are turned. Little painted pictures have been praised by that dangerous praise lavishing coterie called one's friends, and quickly visions of a studio in Paris have flitted through the young painter's brain, and immediately all thoughts of contentment with home surroundings had to move out to make room for the visions of "working abroad."

Going to Paris, the little painter finds she cannot paint. She sadly discovers that one's work may be very good at home and very poor abroad—out in the coldly critical world.

There have been great women in the world, and there are great women in the world today. But if you listen to their histories you will find that nearly all of them, if not quite all, were not praised when first starting on the way; that parents objected to "foolish story writing," or "daubing paints," or "making speeches," and so much of their early work was done in secret.

The lack of praise is hard to endure, but the genius that lives and thrives in spite of hardships is the genius the fruits of which the world is better for. The weaker sort, though there may be through a mighty effort a place made for it in time, had better die young. This seems a trifle cruel to say, but what man or woman is there in the whole wide workaday world who would sell if it were possible to do so the good that has come through the opposition they have met on the way? I rather think they would first part from the little thrills of pleasure they experienced when somebody said their work was good.—Margaret Hannis in St. Louis Republic.

There never was, and never will be, a universal panacea, in one remedy, for all ills to which flesh is heir—the very nature of many curatives being such that were the germs of other and differently seated diseases rooted in the system of the patient—what would relieve one ill, in turn would aggravate the other. We have, however, in Quinine, when obtainable in a sound unadulterated state, a remedy for many and grevious ills. By its gradual and judicious use, the frailest systems are led into convalescence and strength, by the influence which Quinine exerts on Nature's own restoratives. It relieves the drooping spirits of those with whom a chronic state of morbid despondency and lack of interest in life has become a disease, and, by tranquilising the nerves disposes to sound and refreshing sleep—imparts vigor to the action of the blood, which, being stimulated, courses throughout the veins, strengthening the healthy animal functions of the system, thereby making activity a necessary result, strengthing the frame, and giving life to the digestive organs, which naturally demand increased substance—result, improved appetite. Northrop & Lyman of Toronto, have given to the public their superior Quinine Wine at the usual rate, and, gauged by the opinion of scientists, this wine approaches nearest perfection of any in the market. All druggists sell it.

ZENAS THE LAWYER.

REV. DR. TALMAGE PAYS A HIGH TRIBUTE TO THE BAR.

He Treats the Profession of Law From a Moral and Religious Standpoint—Duties of the Christian Lawyer—Many Temptations.

Washington, June 27.—Dr. Talmage's sermon to-day has a special interest for lawyers, and all who expect to be lawyers, and all who are the friends of lawyers. His text is Titus iii, 13, "Bring Zenas the lawyer."

The profession of the law is here introduced, and within two days in the Capital City 303 young men joined it, and at this season in various parts of the land other hundreds are taking their diplomas for that illustrious profession, and is it not appropriate that I address such young men from a moral and religious standpoint, as upon them are now rolling the responsibilities of that calling represented in the text by Zenas the lawyer?

We all admire the heroic and rigous side of Paul's nature, as when he stands coolly deliberate on the deck of the cornship while the jack tars of the Mediterranean are cowering in the cyclone; as when he stands undaunted amid the marbles of the palace before thick necked Nero, surrounded with his 12 cruel lictors; as when we find him earning his livelihood with his own needle, sewing haircloth and preaching the gospel in the interstices; as when we find him able to take the 39 lashes, every stroke of which fetched the blood, yet continuing in his missionary work; as when we find him, regardless of the consequence to himself, delivering a temperance lecture to Felix, the government inebriate. But sometimes we catch a glimpse of the mild and genial side of Paul's nature. It seems that he had a friend who was a barrister by profession. His name was Zenas, and he wanted to see him. Perhaps he had formed the acquaintance of this lawyer in the courtroom. Perhaps sometimes when he wanted to ask some question in regard to Roman law he went to this Zenas the lawyer. At any rate he had a warm attachment for the man, and he provides for his comfortable escort and entertainment as he writes to Titus, "Bring Zenas the lawyer."

This man of my text belonged to a profession in which are many ardent supporters of Christ and the gospel, among them Blackstone, the great commentator on English law, and Wilberforce, the emancipator, and the late Benjamin F. Butler, attorney-general of New York, and the late Charles Chauncey, the leader of the Philadelphia bar, and Chief Justices Marshall and Tenterden and Campbell and Sir Thomas More, who died for the truth on the scaffold, saying to his aghast executioner: "Pluck up courage, man, and do your duty. My neck is very short. Be careful therefore, and do not strike awry."

A Mighty Plea.

Among the mightiest pleas that ever have been made by tongue of barrister have been pleas in behalf of the Bible and Christianity, as when Daniel Webster stood in the supreme court at Washington pleading in the famous Girard will case, denouncing any attempt to educate the people without giving them at the same time moral sentiment as "low, ribald and vulgar deism and infidelity"; as when Samuel L. Southard of New Jersey, the leader of the forum in his day, stood on the platform at Princeton college commencement advocating the literary excellency of the Scriptures; as when Edmund Burke, in the famous trial of Warren Hastings, not only in behalf of the English government, but in behalf of elevated morals, closed his speech in the midst of the most august assemblage ever gathered in Westminster hall by saying: "I impeach Warren Hastings in the name of the House of Commons, whose national character he has dishonored; I impeach him in the name of the people of India, whose rights and liberties he has subverted; I impeach him in the name of human nature, which he has disgraced. In the name of both sexes, and of every rank, and of every station, and of every situation in the world, I impeach Warren Hastings."

Yet, notwithstanding all the pleas which that profession has made in behalf of God, and the church, and the gospel, and the rights of man, there has come down through the generations among many people an absurd and wicked prejudice against it. So long ago as in the time of Oliver Cromwell it was decided that lawyers might not enter the parliament house as members, and they were called "sons of Zeruiah." The learned Dr. Johnson wrote an epitaph for one of them in these words:—

God works wonders now and then.
Here lies a lawyer, an honest man!

Two hundred years ago a treatise was issued with the title, "Doomsday Approaching With Thunder and Lightning For Lawyers." A prominent clergyman of the last century wrote in regard to that profession these words: "There is a society of men among us bred up from their youth in the art of proving, according as they are paid, by words multiplied for the purpose that white is black and black is white. For example, if my neighbor has a mind to my cow, he hires a lawyer to prove that he ought to have my cow from me. I must hire another lawyer to defend my right, it being against all rules of law that a man should speak for himself. In pleading they do not dwell upon the merits of the cause, but upon circumstances foreign thereto. For instance, they do not take the shortest method to know what title my adversary has to my cow, but whether the cow be red or black, her horns long or short, or the like. After that they adjourn the cause from time to time and in 20 years they come to an issue. This society likewise has a peculiar cant or jargon of their own, in which all their laws are written, and these they take especial care to multiply, whereby they have so confounded truth and falsehood that it will take 12 years to decide whether the field left to me by my ancestors for six generations belongs to me or to one 300 miles off."

I say these things to show you that there has been a prejudice going on down against that profession from generation to generation. I account for it on the ground that they compel men to pay debts that they do not want to pay, and that they arraign criminals who want to escape the consequences of their crime, and as long as that is so, and it always will be so, just so long there will be classes of men who will affect at any rate to despise the legal profession. I know not how it is in other countries, but I have had long and wide acquaintance with men of that profession—I have found them in all my parishes, I tarried in one of their offices for three years, where there came real estate lawyers, insurance lawyers, criminal lawyers, marine lawyers—and I have yet to find a class of men more genial or more straightforward. There are in that occupation, as in all our occupations, men utterly obnoxious to God and man. But if I were on trial for my integrity or my life, and I wanted even handed justice administered to me, I would rather have my case submitted to a jury of 12 lawyers

We hear a great deal about purifying the blood. The way to purify it is to enrich it. Blood is not a simple fluid like water. It is made up of minute bodies and when these are deficient, the blood lacks the life-giving principle. Scott's Emulsion is not a mere blood purifier. It actually increases the number of the red corpuscles in the blood and changes unhealthy action into health.

If you want to learn more of it we have a book, which tells the story in simple words.

SCOTT & BOWNE, Belleville, Ont.

than to a jury of 12 clergymen. The legal profession, I believe, has less violence of prejudice than is to be found in the sacred calling.

Temptations.

There is, however, no man who has more temptations or graver responsibilities than the barrister, and he who attempts to discharge the duties of his position with only earthly resources is making a very great mistake. Witness the scores of men who have in that profession made eternal shipwreck. Witness the man who, with the law of the land under their arm, have violated every statute of the eternal God. Witness the men who have argued placidly before earthly tribunals, who shall shiver in dismay before the Judge of quick and dead. Witness Lord Thurlow announcing his loyalty to earthly government in the sentence, "If I forget my earthly sovereign, may God forget me," and yet stooping to unaccountable meannesses. Witness Lord Coke, the learned and the reckless. Witness Sir George McKenzie, the execrated of all Scotch Covenanters, so that until this day, in Gray Friars' churchyard, Edinburgh, the children whistle through the bars of the tomb, crying:—

Bloody Mackenzie, come out if you daur.
Lift the sneck and draw the bar.

No other profession more needs the grace of God to deliver them in their trials, to sustain them in the discharge of their duty. While I would have you bring the merchant to Christ, and while I would have you bring the farmer to Christ, and while I would have you bring the mechanic to Christ, I address you now in the words of Paul to Titus, "Bring Zenas the lawyer." By so much as his duties are delicate and great, by so much does he need Christian stimulus and safeguard. We all become clients. I do not suppose there is a man 50 years of age who has been in active life who has not been afflicted with a lawsuit. Your name is assaulted, and you must have legal protection. Your boundary line is invaded, and the courts must reestablish it. Your patent is infringed upon, and you must make the offending manufacturer pay the penalty. Your treasures are taken, and the thief must be apprehended. You want to make your will and you do not want to follow the example of those who, for the sake of saving $100 from an attorney, imperil $250,000, and keep the generation for 20 years quarreling about the estate, until it is all exhausted. You are struck at by an assassin, and you must invoke for him the penitentiary. All classes of persons in course of time become clients, and therefore they are all interested in the morality and the Christian integrity of the legal profession. "Bring Zenas the lawyer."

Treatment of Clients.

But how is an attorney to decide as to what are the principles by which he should conduct himself in regard to his clients? On one extreme Lord Brougham will appear, saying: "The innocence or guilt of your client is nothing to you. You are to save your client regardless of the torment, the suffering, the destruction of all others. You are to know but one man in the world—your client. You are to save him though you should bring your country into confusion. At all hazards you must save your client." So says Lord Brougham. But no right minded lawyer could adopt that sentiment. On the other extreme Cicero will come to you and say, "You must never plead the cause of a bad man," forgetful of the fact that the greatest villain on earth ought to have a fair trial and that an attorney cannot be judge and advocate at the same time. It was grand when Lord Erskine sacrificed his attorney generalship for the sake of defending Thomas Paine in his publication of his book called "The Rights of Man," while at the same time he, the advocate, abhorred Thomas Paine's irreligious sentiments. Between these two opposite theories of what is right, what shall the attorney do? God alone can direct him. To that chancery he must be appellant, and he will get an answer in an hour. Blessed is that attorney between whose office and the throne of God there is perpetual, reverential and prayerful communication. That attorney will never make an irreparable mistake. True to the habits of your profession you say "Cite us some authority on the subject." Well, I quote to you the decision of the supreme court of heaven, "If any lack wisdom, let him ask of God, who giveth to all men liberally and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him."

What a scene is the office of a busy attorney! In addition to the men who come to you from right motives, bad men will come to you. They will offer you a large fee for counsel in the wrong direction. They want to know from you how they can escape from solemn martial obligation. They come to you wanting to know how they can make the insurance company pay for a destroyed house which they burned down with their own hands, or they come to you on the simple errand of wanting to escape payment of their honest debts.

Now, it is no easy thing to advise settlement, when by urging litigation you could strike a mine of remuneration. It is not a very easy thing to dampen the ardor of an inflamed contestant, when you know through a prolonged lawsuit you could get from him whatever you asked. It is no easy thing to attempt to discourage the suit for the breaking of a will in the surrogate's court because you know the testator was of sound mind and body when he signed the document. It requires no small heroism to do as I once heard an attorney do in an office in a western city. I overheard the conversation when he said, "John, you can go on with this lawsuit, and I will see you through as well as I can, but I want to tell you before you start that a lawsuit is equal to a fire." Under the tremendous temptations that come upon the legal profession there are scores of men who have gone down, and some of them from being the pride of the highest tribunal of the state have become a disgrace to the Tombs courtroom. Every attorney, in addition to the innate sense of right, wants the sustaining power of the old fashioned religion of Jesus Christ. "Bring Zenas the lawyer."

Skepticism.

There are two or three forms of temptation to which the legal profession is specially subject. The first of [illegible] is skepticism. Controversy is the lifetime business of that occupation. Controversy may be incidental or accidental with us, but with you it is perpetual. You get so used to pushing the sharp question "Why?" and making unaided reason superior to the emotions, that the religion of Jesus Christ, which is a simple matter of faith and above human reason, although not contrary to it, has but little chance with some of you. A brilliant orator wrote a book on the first page of which he announced this sentiment, "An honest God is the noblest work of man!" Skepticism is the mightiest temptation of the legal profession, and that man who can stand in that profession, resisting all solicitations to infidelity, and can be as brave as George Briggs of Massachusetts, who stepped from the gubernatorial chair to the missionary convention, "to plead the cause of a dying race; then on his way home from the convention, on a cold day, took off his warm cloak and threw it over the shoulders of a thinly clad missionary, saying, "Take that and wear it: it will do you more good than it will me," or, like Judge John McLean, who can step from the supreme court room of the United States on to the anniversary platform of the American Sunday School union, its most powerful orator, deserves congratulation and encomium. Oh, men of the legal profession, let me beg of you to quit asking questions in regard to religion and begin believing!

The mighty men of your profession, Story and Kent and Mansfield, became Christians, not through their heads, but through their hearts. "Except ye become as a little child, ye shall in no wise enter the kingdom of God." If you do not become a Christian, O man of the legal profession, until you can reason this whole thing out in regard to God and Christ and the immortality of the soul you will never become a Christian at all. Only believe. "Bring Zenas the lawyer."

Sabbath Breaking.

Another mighty temptation for the legal profession is Sabbath breaking. The trial has been going on for 10 or 15 days. The evidence is all in. It is Saturday night. The judge's gavel falls on the desk, and he says, "Crier, adjourn the court until 10 o'clock Monday morning." On Monday morning the counselor is to sum up the case. Thousands of dollars, yea, the reputation and life of his client may depend upon the success of his plea. How will he spend the intervening Sunday? There is not one lawyer out of a hundred that can withstand the temptation to break the Lord's day under such circumstances, and yet if he does he hurts his own soul. What, my brother, you cannot do before 12 o'clock Saturday night or after 12 o'clock Sunday night God does not want you to do at all. Besides that, you want the 24 hours of Sabbath rest to give you that electrical and magnetic force which will be worth more to you before the jury than all the elaboration of your case on the sacred day. My intimate and lamented friend, the late Judge Neilson, in his interesting reminiscences of Rufus Choate, says that during the last case that gentleman tried in New York the court adjourned from Friday until Monday on account of the illness of Mr. Choate. But the chronicler says that on the intervening Sabbath he saw Mr. Choate in the old brick church listening to the Rev. Dr. Gardiner Springer. I do not know whether on the following day Rufus Choate won his cause or lost it, but I do know that his Sabbath rest did not do him any harm. Every lawyer is entitled to one day's rest out of seven. If he surrenders that, he robs three—God, his own soul and his client. Lord Castlereagh and Sir Thomas Romilly were the leaders of the bar in their day. They both died suicides. Wilberforce accounts for their aberration of intellect on the ground that they were unintermittent in their work and they never rested on Sunday. "Poor fellow!" said Wilberforce in regard to Castlereagh; "poor fellow, it was nonobservance of the Sabbath." Chief Justice Hale says, "When I do not properly keep the Lord's day, all the rest of the week is unhappy and unsuccessful in my worldly employment."

I quote to-day from the highest statute book in the universe, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." The legal gentleman who breaks that statute may seem for awhile to be advantaged, but in the long run the men who observe this law of God will have larger retainers, vaster influence, greater professional success than those men who break the statute. Observance of the law of God pays not only spiritually and eternally, but it pays in hard dollars or bank bills.

Another powerful temptation of the legal profession is to artificial stimulus. No one except those who have addressed audiences knows about the nervous exhaustion that sometimes comes afterward. The temptation of strong drink approaches the legal profession at that very point. Then, a trial coming on. Through the ill-ventilated courtroom the barrister's health has been depressed for days and for weeks. He wants to rally his energy. He is tempted to resort to artificial stimulus. It is either to get himself up or let himself down that this temptation comes upon him. The flower of the American bar, ruined in reputation and ruined in estate, said in his last moments: "This is the end. I am dying on a borrowed bed, covered with a borrowed sheet, in a house built by public charity. Bury me under that tree in the middle of the field, that I may not be crowded. I always have been crowded."

The Great Future.

Another powerful temptation of the legal profession is to allow the absorbing duties of the profession to shut out thoughts of the great future. You know very well that you who have so often tried others will after awhile be put on trial yourselves. Death will serve on you a writ of ejectment, and you will be put off these earthly premises. On that day all the affairs of your life will be presented in a "bill of particulars." No certiorari from a higher court, for this is the highest court. The day when Lord Exeter was tried for high treason; the day when the House of Commons moved for the impeachment of Lord Lovat; the days when Charles I and Queen Caroline were put upon trial; the day when Robert Emmet was arraigned as an insurgent; the day when Blennerhassett was brought into the courtroom because he had tried to overthrow the United States government, and all the other great trials of the world are nothing compared with the great trial in which you and I shall appear, summoned before the Judge of quick and dead.

There will be no pleading there "the statute of limitations," no "turning state's evidence," trying to get off ourselves while others suffer, on "moving for a non-suit." The case will come on inexorably, and we shall be tried. You, my brother, who have so often been advocate for others, will then need an advocate for yourself. Have you selected him, the Lord Chancellor of the Universe? If any man sin, we have an advocate—Jesus Christ the righteous. It is uncertain when your case will be called on. "Be ye also ready."

Lord Ashburton and Mr. Wallace were leading barristers in their day. They died about the same time. A few months before their decease they happened to be in the same hotel in a village, the one counsel going to Devonshire, the other going to London. They had both been seized upon by a disease which they knew would be fatal, and they requested that they be carried into the same room and laid down on sofas side by side that they might talk over old times and talk over the future. So they were carried in, and lying there on opposite sofas they talked over their old contests at the bar, and when they talked of the future world, upon which they must soon enter. It was said to have been a very affecting and solemn interview between Mr. Wallace and Lord Ashburton. My subject to-day puts you side by side with those not in your profession who have departed this life, some of them skeptical and rebellious, some of them penitent, childlike and Christian. Those were wandering stars for whom is reserved the blackness of darkness forever, while these others went up from the courtroom of earth to the throne of eternal dominion. Through Christ the advocate these got glorious acquittal. In the other case it was a hopeless lawsuit—an unpardoned sinner versus the Lord God Almighty. Oh, what disastrous litigation! Behold, he comes! The Judge, the Judge, the clouds of heaven, the judicial ermine, the great white throne, the judicial bench, the archangel's voice that shall wake the dead, the crier, "Come, ye blessed; depart ye cursed!" the acquttial or the condemnation. "And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God, and the books were opened."

A Everblooming Plant.

The new hardy climbing rose now being introduced under the name of Empress of China seems to be a really valuable novelty. It is readily established and grows very rapidly; its foliage is dense, graceful and of a rich green color. The plant begins to bloom the first season, and continues to grow and bloom till after the coming of frosts, and what is especially commendable is the fact that it is perfectly hardy. The prairie roses are excellent climbers and produce beautiful flowers, but their season is only for a short period during midsummer.

The climbing hybrid perpetual roses rarely make a satisfactory growth for a pillar or wall and bloom but sparingly during autumn. But here we have a climbing rose that grows almost as freely as a prairie rose, blooms continuously from spring until late in the autumn, and will endure the winter with perfect safety and be ready for serivce early in the spring, enlarging from year to year, and yielding a display of flowers throughout the season that elicits praise and admiration from all observers.

The Empress of China, like other China roses, is of medium size, but the petals are rather broad and of good substance, and when full blown the form is moderately full and the fragrance emitted is deliciously sweet. The buds are gracefully pointed and of a bright carmine rose color. As they develop, however, they change to the beautiful rosy white which is so much admired in the lovely apple bloom. For the buttonhole the half open bud with a spray of the foliage is exquisite, and for a modest hand boquet the vigorous clusters of buds and flowers, with their accompanying foliage, are all that could be desired. "Grows like a morning glory and is as hardy as a grapevine," writes one enthusiastic florist. His enthusiasm may have carried his description too far, but this new climbing rose is evidently one of more than passing merit, and deserves the attention of all who wish an ever blooming, hardy climbing rose.—Woman's Home Companion.

The Whipping Post.

Prior to the Revolution a whipping post stood in Philadelphia at the southeast corner of Third and Market streets. They were also to be found in most other American cities at that time. The pillory, which usually accompanied the whipping of criminals, was regarded as a species of public entertainment. The rabble evinced such pleasure in pelting the culprits with eggs, vegetables and clods that Watson, in his historical annals of Philadelphia, declares that inasmuch as these punishments were inflicted only on market days the price of eggs was then systematically higher than common.

Two centuries ago these punishments were frequently accompanied by the barbarity of slitting the nostrils or clipping the ears of the worst offenders. Afterward the sheriff usually held up the excised fragments of the ears to the gaze and vociferous applause of the multitude. We have no record indicating that nose or ear splitting ever prevailed in America, but instead thereof the pitiless pelting of the offenders with mud or eggs was a universal custom bequeathed to us by old England and practiced until the date of the Revolutionary war.

The penalty of whipping was also a salient feature in the blue laws of New England, as many miserable Quakers abundantly discovered whose zeal had improvidently led them into these colonies. So strong was the prejudice against Quakerism that it was punished by the cat-o'-nine-tails, while the victims were dragged at the rear of a cart from township to township. It was also deemed the only argument that could be used with slaves, or white offenders of the lowest class, which could be hoped to impress them with a proper sense of their transgressions. To simply imprison an indolent slave for a larceny was rather a reward than a penalty for his crime and left no conscientious reproaches upon his torpid nature.—Cosmopolitan.

"The best doctors in Kansas City told me that unless I went to the hospital and had an operation performed I could not live," writes Miss Broohie Galloway, of Wilder, Johnson Co., Kans. "I had ulceration and weakness and each month I would get down in bed and suffer severely for twenty-four hours. I could not keep anything on my stomach for five minutes at a time. I have taken four bottles of your 'Favorite Prescription' and am now well. I owe it all to your medicine. I can cheerfully recommend it to any suffering as I did."

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets are a safe, sure, speedy and permanent cure for constipation. They never gripe. One is a gentle laxative, and two a mild cathartic. All medicine dealers.

How to Clean Your Lamp.

"Do you want to know how to polish the lens of your lamp?" asked the repair man. "If you do, here you are: First clean the surface with a pad of cotton waste and then cover the pad with cotton velvet charged with fine rouge. This will not only remove the scratches, but will impart brilliancy to the glass. Lenses in lanterns should not only be clean and clear, but should be brilliant as well, and brilliancy comes partly from polishing."

The stock of the Bank of England notes which are paid in five years fills 13,400 boxes, which, if placed side by side, would reach over two miles. If the notes themselves were placed in a pile they would reach to a height of five miles. They weigh 90 tons and represent 1,750,000,000 sterling.

BUFFALO BREAKWATER.

Contractors Will Use Canadian Stone—Labor Unions Protest.

Buffalo, N.Y., June 26.—The contractors for the Buffalo breakwater, Messrs. Hughes Brothers and Bangs, of Syracuse, have decided to use Canadian stone in the construction of that great piece of work, which is to cost more than $2,000,000, and the laboring men in Buffalo and throughout Erie and Niagara counties are up in arms. The central labor union of Lockport has passed a series of resolutions denouncing the contractors, calling on the Federal Government to interfere, and threatening all sorts of things. Buffalo labor unions are expected to follow suit. The contractors, however, are apparently undisturbed in their intention. They claim that the right kind of stone for the breakwater can only be obtained in Canada. They are now building at Windmill Point on the Canadian shore, near Port Colborne, a dock which is to be used to load the stone into boats. The stone is to be taken from quarries at Bertie Bay, a few miles inland from Windmill Point. The contractors say that Canadian labor will be used to get the stone from the quarries and take it from there to the dock; but when it is placed on the dock, it will be removed to the boats by American laborers.

The work on the breakwater has been in progress for some months, the stone used being taken from quarries near Lockport. The stone proved unsatisfactory, hence the change, and the resolutions of condemnation.

WHO OWNS THIS GOLD?

Discoveries Likely to Cause International Dispute.

Duluth, Minn., June [illegible].—Gold has been discovered on [illegible] Point Island, in Rainy lake, which will undoubtedly lead to an international boundary dispute between Great Britain and the United States. According to the maps of the Geological Survey, the island is in Canadian territory, but according to the wording of the Treaty of Ghent, the island is a part of the State of Minnesota. Canada has issued patents on several valuable mining locations on the island, and vigorous protests are being sent to Washington by American prospectors. The miners throughout the Rainy lake district are considerably wrought up over the matter, and there is probability of trouble unless something is done. The way things now stand, the United States loses entire control even of her waters in Rainy lake, as, according to the Geological Survey, the United States cannot get a boat into Rainy lake without first going into Canadian waters. The Three Hundred Islands' boundary dispute is of minor importance compared to this.

Rheumatism & Dyspepsia CURED.

571 St. Patrick Street,
Ottawa, July 31st, 1896.

To the Phrenoline Medicine Co., Ltd., Ottawa, Ont.

GENTLEMEN,—On the advice of a friend I tried one bottle of your famous rheumatic remedy, Phrenoline, and to my surprise it cured me of rheumatism, from which I have suffered for many years.

It also cured me of dyspepsia, from which I was suffering at the time, so that I feel now like a new man.

I have tried several remedies for rheumatism, some of which did me a certain amount of good, but nothing that I have taken has done so much for me as your Phrenoline, and I have much pleasure in recommending it to other sufferers.

Yours very truly,
(Signed) JAMES CARROLL,

NAVAL REVIEW.

GRAND DISPLAY—FITTING CLOSE TO THE JUBILEE CELEBRATION.

Imposing Mass of Warships at Portsmouth —Twenty-five Miles of British Vessels.

Portsmouth, June 26.—After a threatening morning, the weather brightened, and a brilliant day for the great naval review is promised. The streets were thronged with people at an early hour, and on all sides were to be seen bewildering masses of glittering uniforms, gay multitudes of civilians, military bands and sailors of all ranks and nationalities. In gallant array off the coast were the nearly 200 British war vessels, manned by about 45,000 men, aggregating some 600,000 tons, which were to be reviewed by the Prince of Wales, representing the Queen, as the final display of the jubilee celebrations. The colonial troops arrived at 8 o'clock and were met at the railroad station by a military guard of honor. Then, headed by military bands, they marched to the Town Hall, where the Lord Mayor and Corporation of Portsmouth, in full robes of office, welcomed the visitors. The soldiers from the colonies received a great popular ovation. Their march from the station to the Town Hall, and from the Town Hall to the point of embarkation, was nothing less than a triumphal progress.

The American line steamship New York, with a large party of sight-seers on board, left Southampton at 5 o'clock yesterday evening, and took up the position assigned to her in the line of special merchant vessels, off Ryde. As the American greyhound traversed the lines of British warships with the stars and stripes flying proudly, and a fine band playing national airs, each warship dipped her flag, and she was greeted with hearty cheers from the many thousands of blue jackets manning the fleet. As the New York passed the German warship Konig Wilhelm, the latter's band played "Hail Columbia."

A VISION OF GREATNESS.

Ryde, Isle of Wight, June 26.—(10 a.m.)—The apotheosis of Great Britain has rightly culminated on the waters of the Solent. London witnessed the sumptuous outpouring of loyalty, the love of a proud people for their Sovereign, an exhibition of national growth and domination, in the long train of Princes and potentates which graced the Queen's triumph. All of it put together, however, furnished no such living picture of the might of Britain as was afforded this morning by the great naval display in these waters.

Nor has there been anything this week in all that has gone before to bring home so vividly the material changes of the Queen's long reign. When Victoria ascended the throne, the "Walls of England" were wooden. There were no steel battleships, no iron cruisers, no triple engines, no steam in use in war vessels, no search lights, no electricity in the service of man, no great or quick-firing guns, no torpedoes. The lights aboard were still lit with flint and steel, and were no more brilliant than whale's oil could be; the guns were still fired with a slow match; the three-decker was still the model of all that was worthy in naval architecture, and tonnage was reckoned within such modest limits that a vessel of more than 3,000 was looked upon as a marine wonder. Never before, had a Sovereign seen such changes in the bulwarks of empire as has fallen to the lot of Queen Victoria.

TRIUMPHS OF GENIUS.

At Spithead this morning was assembled the latest triumph of the industrial revolution under Victoria; triumphs of workers in iron and steel and metals, triumphs of inventors, triumphs of chemists and the giants of the laboratory, triumphs of the shipbuilder, the engineer and the artisan, triumphs of the genius of a great nation. This may be demonstrated better by figures. In 1837 the total number of ships in commission was 196. Omitting steam paddle tugs, not then considered vessels of war, and other small craft, such as cutters, receiving ships, yachts and packet brigs, the navy list comprised 129 ships, whereof the largest had a displacement of 4,000 tons. The navy list this year, including ships in and out of commission, but on the list, comprises 439 vessels, mounting 2,959 guns, with a tonnage of 1,463,219, and a horse power of 1,887,595.

It is perhaps, a pity that in the seven lines of the British fleet at Spithead there was not anchored one old three-decker to emphasize this startling change. The men-of-war that first saluted the Queen in the long ago were magnificent sights with their high decks and towering masts bearing billow on billow of swelling sail, riding the waves like great sea birds and realizing to the full all the wild witchery of the romance of the ocean. Far different were the great battle ships this morning with their sullen steel sides and short masts, great guns, rams and torpedoes—everything that gave the sense of power, the brutality of force.

A GRAND ARRAY.

The total array of armed vessels was 166, manned by 45,000 men and moored in lines of five miles each. The 14 foreign warships formed the sixth line. The aggregate British tonnage was about 660,000 tons. The fleet was drawn up in seven lines on the south of the Solent, the head of the lines being off Brading, thence stretching westward almost to Cowes.

The outer line of all on either side of the Sturbridge shoal, and known as "E" line, was composed of fourteen special merchant vessels whereof the American liner New York was one.

Next in "A" line were the foreign men-of-war. These were:—

United States of America—First-class cruiser Brooklyn, Rear-Admiral Miller.

Austria-Hungary — Ironclad Wien, Vice-Admiral Hermann, Baron Spann.

Italy—Battleship Lepanto, Vice-Admiral Morin.

Russia—Battleship Rossia, Rear-Admiral Nicholas Skrydloff.

Netherlands—The Eversten, Rear-Admiral F. K. Englbrecht.

Denmark—The Heligoland, Rear-Admiral H. H. Koch.

Sweden—The Gotha, Rear-Admiral Klintberg.

THE LIVE STOCK MARKET.

Toronto, June 29.—At the Western cattle yards to-day we had a total of 100 loads, including 1,000 hogs, between three and four hundred sheep and lambs, about 80 calves, and a few milkers. The market was overloaded with poor cattle, and trade was brisk, but prices were weak.

There was a quiet demand for shipping cattle, and prices were nominally unchanged at from 3¾ to 4c per pound, but there was no life in the business, and sales were slow.

In butcher cattle trade was dull. We had a lot of poor stuff in which killed the market, and a good quantity of it was unsold. Prices ranged from 3 to 3½, and for a few choice selections 3¾c, and even 4c was occasionally paid, but this did not prevent the general trade from being altogether bad. Good butcher cattle will sell, and did sell well this morning, but the large run of inferior stuff had a depressing effect.

There was a large quantity of lambs in, and prices, while unchanged, were easy, at from $3 to $3.50 each. All sold, and prime lambs are wanted, as it was only the choice stuff that fetched the higher figure. For a few extra choice lambs, $3.75 was paid, but from $3 to $3.25 was a general price.

Excellent Reasons exist why Dr. Thomas' Eclectric Oil should be used by persons troubled with affections of the throat or lungs, sores upon the skin, rheumatic pain, corns, bunions, or external injuries. The reasons are, that it is speedy, pure and unobjectionable, whether taken internally or applied outwardly.

Free and easy expectoration immediately relieves and frees the throat and lungs from viscid phlegm, and a medicine that promotes this is the best medicine to use for coughs, colds, inflammation of the lungs and all affections of the throat and chest. This is precisely what Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup is a specific for, and wherever used it has given unbounded satisfaction. Children like it because it is pleasant, adults like it because it relieves and cures the disease.

It is stated on high authority that the Queen thinks that after sixty years' reign she deserves a well-earned rest, and in so far as a sovereign can, she now proposes to let the Prince and Princess of Wales in future hold all drawing-rooms and levees, and perform other public functions appertaining to royalty.

Mr. Thomas McDonald, Point Ann, Belleville, has made a black bass hatchery of a disused quarry at Point Ann, which has been filled with water by a spring. He put in 14 bass several weeks since and now there are at least 200,000 fry in the pond, which is about 100 ft. by 70 ft.

The doctor may be a good old man, but even so, medical examinations and the "local-application" treatment are abhorrent to every modest woman. They are embarrassing—often useless. They should not be submitted to until everything else has been tried. In nine cases out of ten, there is no reason for them. In nine cases out of ten, the doctor in general practice isn't competent to treat female diseases. They make a branch of medicine by themselves. They are distinct from other ailments. They can be properly understood and treated only by one who has had years of actual practice and experience in this particular line. This is true of Dr. R. V. Pierce, chief consulting physician of the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, at Buffalo, N. Y. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, a remedy for all derangements of the reproductive organs of women, has been in actual use for more than thirty years. It cures every form of "female weakness."

Cholera morbus, cramps and kindred complaints annually make their appearance at the same time as the hot weather, green fruit, cucumbers, melons, etc., and many persons are debarred from eating these tempting fruits, but they need not abstain if they have Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery Cordial, and take a few drops in water. It cures the cramps and cholera in a remarkable manner, and is sure to check every disturbance of the bowels.

Timorous Tommy.

Just list a moment, and I will tell
Of a strange adventure that befell
A timid youngster I knew quite well—
Young Timorous Tommy of Glenwood dell.
Just out of dell, half up the hill,
There stood a towering, tall windmill,
And still beyond stood a cottage small,
Where lived a lad named Timothy Hall,
A playmate of Timorous Tommy.

One night young Tommy essayed to go
To Timothy's house, for a call, you know.
The thin, new moon with its faint, pale glow
Scarce lighted the objects on the earth below.
As Timorous Tommy stole up the road
Toward the cottage small where his friend abode
His heart grew sick with a nameless fear;
He felt some danger was lurking near.
Apprehensive Timorous Tommy!

Then, what do you think? Alack! Alack!
A terrible thing stood in his track.
'Twas tall and shadowy and weird and black,
And its waving arms seemed warning him back,
While there came a grinding, munching noise,
As though the creature were eating boys.
With a cry of terror he turned and fled,
And down the road to his home he sped.
Poor, terrified Timorous Tommy!

He trod that road the following day
And then discovered to his dismay
That the creature fierce that blocked his way
And led him such terror to display
Was naught but the busy, long armed mill
That clanked and creaked as with hearty will
It labored all day and turned all night,
Innocent of all intent to fright
This trembling Timorous Tommy.

Is Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor. Rapid, painless, its action is a marvel to all who have tried it. Fancy getting rid of painful corns in twenty-four hours. "Putnam's" does it.

Beekeeping at the North.

Stimulative spring feeding to start brood rearing preparatory to gathering the white honey flow has proved positively injurious at the Vermont station, which reports that such feeding should not be allowed until enough young bees have hatched in the hives to maintain the heat of the colony. Should it become necessary to feed, the advice is to place combs of honey or filled with sugar sirup in the brood chamber where the bees can have access to them. Any management that will cause bees to become active during cool, windy weather is liable to bring about spring dwindling, which is very demoralizing in lessening the working force necessary to preserve the welfare of the colony until the young bees, with greater vitality, are able to supply the hive. After the weather is settled and warm stimulative feeding may often prove beneficial, particularly if there promises to be a scarcity of honey in the field.

Strawberries In New York.

In 1896 over 100 varieties of strawberries were grown at the Geneva (N. Y.) station. Of the varieties which fruited there for the first time in 1896, Bissel, Earliest, Enormous, Thompson No. 101, Tubbs and William Belt are considered especially promising. Bostonian, Marshall, Marston and Tennessee have been fruited two seasons and are recommended as worthy of testing.

SAVED HER DRUNKEN HUSBAND

She Finally Administered a Remedy Without his Knowledge, and Cured Him.

A correspondent writes: I had such a happy home and a noble, big-hearted husband till he took to drinking, first through sociability, then because the fiendish desire would come over him, crazing him for drink.

"I was heart-broken. My happy home was fast becoming one of misery till a friend told me to try a liquor cure called Anti-Booze. I was willing to try anything, so I sent $1.00 as she suggested, to the Oriental Chemical Co., 20 St. Alexis St., Montreal, and by return mail I received in a plain wrapper a little box of pills. I put one of these in his coffee every night and morning without him knowing it, (as they dissolve immediately), and in less than a week, to my delight, he stopped drinking entirely.

"Anti-Booze has changed my drunken husband into a sober, industrious, happy man, and I feel it my duty to tell others about it. They will send full information without charge to any who will write them. "J. D. H." 18cm

Thirty Years' Efficient Work.
Miss Aylsworth, teacher of the primary classes in the West Ward School, sent in her resignation to the School Board on Monday evening, stating that, after thirty years of painstaking and efficient service, owing to an increasing infirmity, she reluctantly did so. Miss Aylsworth has during all these years been a most popular teacher, both with the Board, the pupils and the parents, and it is with much regret on all sides that she is compelled to sever her relations with the school, scholars and teachers. The excellent work that Miss Aylsworth has done in moulding and training our little ones, for over a quarter of a century, cannot be overestimated. The members of the Board are fully aware of this, as the following resolution indicates: Moved by Mr. Preston, seconded by Mr. Herrington, that the Board accept the resignation of Miss Aylsworth as teacher in the West Ward School, but while so doing the Board desires to place on record the high esteem in which Miss Aylesworth has been held by this Board, and further desire to express their appreciation of her long and faithful term of service in our public school, and regret that her infirmity has rendered her resignation necessary. Carried.

Runaway Accident.
Last Friday evening Mrs. Albert Doller daughter of Mr. and Mrs. B. B. Vanslyck, received word that her mother, who had been ill with heart trouble for over a year, was in a very serious condition. Accompanied by her husband and baby they at once set out for her father's. At the Morven postoffice they stopped for the mail, Mr. Doller alighting to tie the horse. In snapping the chain into the bit the click scared the animal; quickly jerking its head up, the headstall was broken, freeing the bit from the horse's mouth. Dashing across the road the baby fell out, the buggy being run into the fence and Mrs Dollar thrown out and against a telephone pole. She was taken up insensible, conveyed to her father's residence and a doctor summoned. She had received a bad gash near the eye, her cheek and ear being also badly bruised. She is now reported to be considerabily better. The baby escaped injury.

Bicycle Party.
Dr. and Mrs. H. B. Wray, on Monday evening last, introduced a new feature in entertainments in town—a bicycle party. The party of ladies and gentlemen assembled at their residence, Bridge street West, and wheeled some ten miles up the Belleville road, returning to town about 9 o'clock. Luncheon was then served, and the ride having whetted the appetites of the party to a keen edge, the refreshments were greatly enjoyed. After a little time spent in progressive euchre, dancing was indulged in, and at a very reasonable hour the company dispersed very much pleased with the evening. The Dr. and his aimable wife are popular hosts, and it is likely that this plan of entertaining will become much in vogue. Those present were: Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Robinson, Mr. and Mrs. W. K. Pruyn, Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Baines, Mrs. Jemmett, Prescott, Miss Mill, Mrs. MacNaughton, Mrs. Burritt, Miss Harshaw, Misses Maria and Bert Grange, Messrs. Wm. C. Smith, R. P. Lahey, Molson, Fred S. Richardson and Stewart Lockridge.

Why not Develop Home Mines?
Mr. J. Rud Perry is out back prospecting and has during the past week secured several very fine claims. Mineralogists who have looked over the district between Bridgewater and Cloyne pronounce it the most likely gold bearing region of Canada, its volcanic origin being fully in evidence. If this is the case, why should we send money from here to develop some unknown and unapproachable region, where it may cost ten dollars to get nine? Why not spend something to develop that that lies at our own door? Experts who have had experience in California and the Black Hills state that a strip averaging about four miles wide and sixteen miles long, and within ten miles of the C. P. R. station, contains more top show for gold than any other piece of the same size in America. Let us hope that capital will be forth coming for development.

Tweed News:—Mr. W. G. Wilson, barrister, of Napanee, and Captain J. P. Williams, practical miner and Practical Miner's Engineer, of Toronto, gave the News and Mr. Harrison's Assay Office a call this week, while on their way to examine some mining properties in the rear townships. Since leaving his native place (Cornwall, England) Mr. Williams has been engaged in mining land prospecting in the Transvaal (Africa), the U. S. Territories, British Columbia, Algoma, Rainy River, and latterly in Central Ontario, and freely gives it as his opinion that this part of Ontario is second to no other mining country he has seen as a field for profitable gold mining, and will probably prove to be the greatest gold producing country in the world. As to climate, easy access to mining sections by road and rail, cheap and abundant labor, supplies and fuel, it is now incomparable. While here Mr. Williams and Mr. Harrison went to inspect some mining properties along the B. of Q. R. line in company with Mr. Wilson and Mr. Jas. Bryden of Kaladar.

An Aged Visitor.
Elisha Wesley, formerly of Adolphustown, in the County of Lennox and Addington, visited the Parliament buildings in Toronto recently. Mr. Wesley is 83 years of age, and consequently was 23 years old when Victoria was crowned. He was born in 1815 in Adolphustown. He lived in Belleville 50 years, and is now living in Toronto. Mr. Wesley was acquainted with Hon. George Brown and Sir John A. Macdonald, and voted for Hon. Robert Baldwin in 1841.

Another Mining Deal.
Highly encouraging news continues to be received from the gold mining region. A few weeks ago the Guina gold mine, in Kaladar township, was bought for $500. A month ago it changed hands for $15,000, and last week it was sold to a syndicate of capitalists from the United States for $30,000. Mr. W. J. Magrath has a property in the same vicinity, from which he has received some very fine samples of mispickel and quartz.—Intelligencer.

Canada's Great Victorian-Era Exposition and Industrial Fair.
We have received a copy of the Prize List for the great Victorian-Era Exposition and Industrial Fair, which is to be held at Toronto, from the 30th August to the 11th September next. It promises to exceed in magnitude and attractiveness all previous exhibitions held in Canada. Among the many special features to be provided will be a duplication of the principal features of the great Jubilee procession in London, England, on the 22nd of June, all the uniforms, costumes and properties being brought from England for the purpose at an enormous cost. Anyone desiring a copy of the Prize List can procure one by dropping a post-card to the Manager, Mr. H. J. Hill, Toronto.

A Remarkable Old Man.
Hungerford is proud to own as one of her respected citizens an aged gentleman in the person of Mr. Robt. Barker, of Chapman neighborhood, who remembers quite well the Jubilee of King Geo. III in 1810. Mr. Barker will be 91 years old on the 30th day of August, if he is spared to live until that date, and is one of the best preserved men of his age we have had the privilege of meeting. He comes to town frequently and pays an occasional welcome visit to the News Office, and converses very freely on the public questions of the day. He was four years old at the time of Geo. III's Jubilee and was living at Nantwich, England, at the time. The fact was impressed so vividly on his young memory by the action of his nurse, who kept him out on the public streets till long after midnight viewing the demonstration.—Tweed News.

"Home and Youth."
The name of the monthly periodical, "Our Home," which has been published for some years in Montreal, first by the Wells & Richardson Co., subsequently by Mr. Watson Griffin, has been changed to "Home and Youth," and the publication office removed to Toronto. The magazine has been purchased by The Home and Youth Publishing Co., Toronto, and has been enlarged from 48 to 68 pages. The June number, issued under the new management, is enclosed in a handsome cover, and the intention is to use a better quality of paper, so as to permit of the use of better engravings, and to make other improvements which will enhance the value of an already valued publication. The change of name is due to the expressed appreciation of the magazine by the youth of the country, whose interests will in future receive adequate consideration. Through the experience and well-directed efforts of its former publishers the magazine has become well and favorably known throughout Canada and the United States, and the present publishers hope to futher add to its success. Notwithstanding present and prospective improvements, the subscription price will be maintained at only 50 cents per year.

Newburgh's New Pastor.
On Tuesday evening, June 15th, the friends of Rev. C. L. Thomson, not of his denomination, entertained him in the Workmen's Hall in a very pleasant and social "At Home" in order to give expression of their kindly feelings towards himself and family, on the eve of their departure to take up their residence in Newburgh, where his ministerial duties will lie for the next few years. Rev. Mr. Thompson, during his residence in Stirling has from his manly and upright character, endeared himself to all, and will carry away with him the kindest wishes for his future peace and prosperity in his new home. His cultured manner and bright intellectual powers should make him a welcome acquisition to the people who are fortunate enough to secure him. The evening was spent very pleasantly in speech and song, and will long be remembered by those who were fortunate enough to listen to his address in response to the toast of the evening. Mr Jas. Boldrick occupied the chair, and all felt that they had performed a very pleasant duty in doing an honor to the Rev. Mr. Thompson, where it was justly merited. We all wish him happiness, and bespeak for him and his family a kind and welcome reception in his new home in Newburgh.—Stirling News-Argus.

Mr. Thompson also received appreciative addresses from the two Epworth Leagues on his former circuit which go to show his popularity with the young people.

TWINING—DALY.

A very pretty house wedding which has long been anticipated by many took place Saturday morning last at eleven o'clock at the residence of, Mrs. George Daly, Donald st., when her second daughter, Louisa Mary, was married to Captain Philip Geoffrey Twining, Royal Engineer, of the Kingston Military College, and formerly of Halifax, N.S. The Rev. D. G. McPhail, B.A., of Picton, performed the ceremony. The home of the bride was beautifully decorated with palms, ferns and the choicest cut flowers, sent by friends from Kingston and Napanee, the bridal party standing in front of a bank of bloom and under a beautiful bell of marguerites and ferns. The bride looked charming in a tailor-made gown of green covert cloth handsomely braided in black and carried a shower bouquet of white bride roses. Owing to the illness of Mr. Henry Twining in New York the duties of bridesmaid and groomsman were dispensed with.

After the ceremony a reception was held, followed by the wedding breakfast, at which several congratulatory telegrams were read. Captain and Mrs. Twining left by the noon train amid a shower of rice, old shoes, and the famous Hanley torpedoes for Montreal, Quebec and Halifax, intending to spend the summer months at "The Arm," near the latter place.

Among the guests were Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Morden, Rev. Mr. and Mrs. McPhail, Picton; J. McIntrye, Q.C., Kingston; Mr. and Mrs. L. H. Bennett, Deseronto; Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Daly, Mrs. Burritt, Mr. and Mrs. D. C. MacNaughton, Mr. and Mrs F. S. Richardson, Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Grange; Mr. Morden, Kingston.

The presents to the popular bride and groom were beautiful and varied and showed the many friends each has made. The bride has been prominent in musical and social circles for a number of years in Montreal, and was soprano soloist in Christ Church Cathedral in that city.

On their return they will live in Kingston. Among the beautiful and costly collection of gifts were noticed a pearl pendant, brass tables, bric-a-brac, cutlery, many valuable silver pieces, checks, bonbonieres and many others too numerous to make special mention.

THE BEAVER and a host of friends of the bride and groom extend congratulations and wish them a happy voyage across life's matrimonial sea.

TRUMPOUR—GURREN

A quiet wedding was solemnized at the residence of the bride's parents, Sandhurst, on Wednesday, June 23d, when the Rev. Forneri, of Adolphustown, united in the holy bonds of wedlock, Miss Edith Gurren and Mr. Luke P. Trumpour, of Dorland. The bride, attired in white silk, trimmed with chiffon, wore a handsome diamond brooch, the gift of the groom. She was ably assisted by Miss Lottie Allen, of Napanee, while Mr. T. Gurren, brother of the bride, acted as best man. The event was a very quiet one, only intimate friends and relatives being present. The ceremony took place at 11 o'clock a.m., after which all partook of a sumptuous dinner prepared by the host and hostess, which was enjoyed by all present. At 2 o'clock p.m. Mr. Trumpour and bride left for Deseronto and thence by one of the liners for an extended tour to Rochester, Buffalo, Niagara and Toronto. A heavy shower of rice was bestowed upon them by their anxious and well-wishing friends.—[COM.

ANOTHER JUNE TORONTO WEDDING.

On Wednesday, June 16th, at the Church of the Redeemer, Toronto, by the Rev. Septimus Jones, there occurred another pretty wedding, when Miss Lillie Webb, of Charles street, eldest daughter of the late W. W. Webb, ex-M.L.A. for East Northumberland, was married to Dr. R. J. Wade, last year's Warden of the United Counties of Northumberland and Durham. The bride was given away by her brother, Mr. Albert E. Webb, stock broker of this city. The wedding party left on the 5 o'clock train for the East and intend spending a few months in the Old Countries. At many of the stations between Bowmanville and Belleville the party was greeted by friends of the Ex-Warden and at the groom's native town, Brighton, an immense crowd of citizens from town and country, headed by the brass band, turned out to do honor to the young couple. On Monday evening a banquet was given at the Proctor House, Brighton, to the Doctor by the young men of the town, when a jolly evening was spent under the guidance of Dr. Dean, as chairman.

FELLOWS—GALBRAITH.

The home of Mr. Samuel Galbraith, of Camden East, was the scene of a very pleasant event on Wednesday evening, June 23d, when his youngest daughter, Dora, was united in marriage to Mr. Sidney L. Fellows, of the Township of Ernesttown. The ceremony was performed by Rev. R. McCulloch. Mr. and Mrs. Galbraith made all the guests feel at home and the wedding supper was everything that could be desired. Congratulatory addresses were made by Mr. Fellows, father of the groom, Messrs. J. S. and George Galbraith and Rev. R. McCulloch and were pleasantly responded to by the groom. This makes the fifth member of the Camden East Methodist choir that has been married within three years. The bride carries with her the very best wishes of a large number of friends and acquaintances in and around Camden East.—[COM.

Dr. S. J. Andres, Montreal, says; "'Quickcure' overcomes the pain quickly; gives relief for a long time; is especially valuable for children's teeth which should not be extracted until their successors appear. It is perfectly safe to use at all ages, and does not injure the teeth as many other remedies used for toothache do." Ask your druggist for it.
